SONG OF THE CHOLEBA. By Q. Rambo. Lo ! I come, whil God's the mandate.

Wee and wailing glooms the land, 'Fore me qualis the low-the magnate-Who shall stry my_lifted band ? Borne in vonder clime, where error

Bleeding Jesus hung on high-Forth I come a scourge and terror, Myriads now must writh and die. Every gale I make my dwelling,

Thence I thrust the fatal dart. Death's pale ranks for me are swelling, Darkness seals the buoyant heart. ' Over plain and moor and mountain,

Rolls the preeze that I pervade,

There I chill life's current-fountain-Darkly looms the land of shade. I have swept the varied nations-Trophles grin ny arm hath made-Rank and age and pride and station, Through them all my course is laid. Life and Death have met and parted, Quickly as I hasten'd o'cr, And the good, the noble-hearted, Still shall fall to rise no more.

War in garments, red and rory, Famine foo their work have done; Now a race of gloony glory, E'er they slumbered I've begun.

Then, prepare ve, high or lowly-Cot or palace, none are spared,

For them all my arm is bared.
