The following lines, descriptive of a scene in a private mathouse, are from the pen of M. G. Lewis, Eaq. They stern published in the National Intelligencer shout eighteen years since, the editors of which paper introduced them with these tremarks:—"If any one can read the following lines without shuddering in sympathy with the supposed captive, he must have a heart dead to every human feeling."

I'il rave no more in proud despair,
My language shall be mild, though and;
But yet I'il firmly, truly awear,
I am not midd: I am not mad!

His heart at once 'twill grieve and gla: To know, though kept a captive here, I am not mad! I am not mad! He smiles in scorn, and turns the key!
He quits the gate! I knelt in vain!
His glimm'ring tamp, still, still I see!
'Tis gone—and all is gloom again.
Cold, bitter cold—no warmth, no light!

Life! all thy comforts once I had!. Yet here I'm chained this freezing ni ot here I'm chained this freezing night, Although not mad! no, no, not mad! 'Tis sure some dream ! some vision vain What! I the child of rank and wealth And I the wretch who clauks this chain, Bereft of freedom, friends and health? Ah: while I dwell on blessings fied.

Which never more my heart must glad. How aches my heart, how burns my head, But tis not mad t no, 'tis not mad! Hast thou my child, forgot ere this, A mother's face, a mother's tongue? Sho'll ne'e'r forget your parting kiss, Norround her neck how fast you clung; Nor how with me you sued to stay;
Nor how that suit your sire forbade;
Nor how—I'll drive such thoughts away—

They'll make me mad-they'll make me mad His rosy lips, how sweet they miled-His mild blue eyes, how bright they shone
None ever bore u toyler child—
And art thou now forever gone? And must I never see thee more My pretty, pretty little lad 1. I will be free-unbar the door-

Now for Charley's resolution—yes he kept it.

"But, Fanny," he continued, with remarkable self-mossession, with a few preliminaries not to be self-mossession, with a few preliminaries not to be found thomselves threading their way through the streets at an early hour. Now for Charley's resolution—yes he kept it.

"But, Fanny," he continued, with remarkable self-possession, with a few preliminaries not to be repeated, "I want you to understand exactly my position, how I intend for the present to live, and what plans we must pursue. a great deal, he had a great deal more to say—
"and then, decide carefully and conscienciously."
Fanny did think it all over; much that he had said was quite new to her. To be married! to be mind what it does to the minds of too many young ladies, gay visions of wealth and independence, during everything one wisfied—a lover in the bushand, amusement in the parlor. Fanny belonged to that class of females, who, without fortune or expectations, had been brought up amid the appliances of wealth. She was an orphan, and lived in the family of an uncle. With few parlor duties, and none in the kinchen, she bad lived an easy, independent life, fluating on society with untried energies, and undeveloped powers. Rich men did not seek her, because rich men generally seek to increase their wealth with matrimonial cares; a poor man might fear, and justly fear, as Charles Sc. ett did, because females thus educated often shrink irom the exerctions and cares of household employments; they are slow in finding out that house are made to work with and they are apt to regard work as menial service. If all young men would do as Charles Scott did, frankly unfold to as if the had good reason for feeling it.

Female Education .- Female education is of immense importance as connected with domes-tic life. It is at home where a man passes the largest portion of his time; where he seeks re-luge from the versions and embarrasaments of business and enchanting repose from the exertion, a relexation from care by the interchange of affections: when some of his finest sympathies, testes, moral, and disinterested love—such as seldem found in the walks of a seldeh and cale

Charles Scott was not quite satisfied. He remained to satisfy sentimental love. It is said, understands no sithmetic, and knows no reason. He had fixed principles of action, and settled rules to govern his choice of a wife; he did not mean that love-should laugh him out of them, or blind him to their value. No, he determined to abide by them.

Some time passed away, and never was a man more devoted to business. Perhaps he dreamed of Fanny, but he did not visit her.

Behold a gathering of friends, a pleasant little company; Charles was never, and Fanny too.
