OUR CHILDHOOD. 'Tis sad-yet sweet-to listen
To the soft wind's gentle swell, And think we hear the music Our childhood knew so well; To gaze out on the even, And the boundless fields of air,

And feel again our boy bood's wish To roam, like angels there! There are many dreams of gladuess That cling around the past-And from the tomb of feeling Old thoughts come thronging fast-The forms we loved so dearly
In the happy days now gone,
The beautiful and lovely,

the fair brow is bent in a frown; the fose leaf is pushed up in defiance, and the white shoulders thrust forward. Can any but a child look so pretty even in their naughtiness?

Then comes the instant change; flashing smiles and tears, as the good comes back all in a rush, and you are overwhelmed with protestations, promises and kieses. They are irresistible, too, these little ones! They pull away the scholar's pen, tumble about his paper, make somersets over these little ones! They pull away the scholar's pen, tumble about his paper, make somersets over his books, and what can he do? They tear up newspapers, litter the carpets, break, pull, and upost, and then jabber unintelligible. English in self-defence, and what can you do for yourself!

"If I had a child," says the precise man," "you should see!!" He does have a child, and his child tears up his papers, tumbles over his child sears up his papers, tumbles over his childs and what has the precise man to say for himself? Nothing! He is like every body else; "a little Nothing! He is like every body else; "a little not and what has the precise man to say for himself? Nothing! He is like every body else; "a little not and what has the precise man to say for himself? I had a child, and what has the precise man to say for himself? I had a child, and what has the precise man to say for himself? I had a child, and what has the precise man to say for himself? I had a child, and what has the precise man to say for himself? Dishonesty is not only to be found among men and women, but alse! it is too often found in the circles of the young. Many children as small as you, my reader, are often met with, indulging in Hosnings fill the wood and wild Where human step ne'er trod; And nature, like an unwenned child, Smiles on its parent God.

Poor little children, they bring and teach us human beings more good than they get in return. How often does the infant, with its soft check and helpless hand, awaken a mother from world-liness and gottism to a world of a new and higher feeling. How often does the mother repay this by doing her test to wipe off, even hefore the time, the dew and firesh simplicity of childhood, and make her daughter too soon a woman of that world, at she has been.
