THE ROMAN HYMN OF LIBERTY. Let the mountains exult around? Once more old Rome is crowned!

Sing out, oh vale and wave : Look out from each laureled grave. Brigh dust of the deathless brave! Jubilate:

Pale vision, what art thou? Lo, From time's dark deeps, Like a wind it sweeps Like winds when the tempests blow: A shadowy form—as a giant ghost— It stands in the midst of the armed boat: The dead man's shrbud of the armed host!

And the gloom of its presence the daylight dims! And the trembling world looks on aghast-All hall to the soul of the Mighty Past !

is we speak -as we hallo! it moves, it breathes : From its clouded crest bud the laurel wreaths-As a sun that laps up from the arms of night, he shadow takes shape and the gloom takes light. Hail! all hall!

THE SOUL OF THE PAST, again, To its ancient home, In the heart of Rome, Hath come to resume its reign Oh. Fame, with a prophet's voice, Wherever the proud are strong, And right is oppressed by wrong-Go forth, with a trumpet's sound ! And tell to the nations round-On the hills which the heroes trod-In the shrines of the saints of God-In the Casar's half and the martyr's prison— That the slumber is broke and the sleeper arisen t That the reign of the Goth and the Vandal is o'er ! At the very time when this conversation best tween the Conants and Mrs. Bell occurred, a secon was passing at the cottage, which could they have hoowed would have read them a lesson never to have been forgotten.

Mrs. Walton was sitting by ner work-shall which stood not far from an open-window that overlooked the river, called, in poetic lore, the "soft-flowing Connecticut," (but which here, compressed in its channel, was deep and rapid.) and pressed in its channel, was deep and rapus, and the green hills beyond. It was a soft June are-ning, the sun had disappeared behind the western mountains, but his beams yet rested on the heads of the tall chiffs that bordered the river, and tright of the tall chils that bordered the river, and originate ened the old ever-greens that clothed the broken hills on the castern shore. The flowers that surrounded the cottage, were filled with fresh fragrance as the evening drew on; and the birds that througed, unmolested, in this sanctuary of peace, were pouring forth their sweetest songs of thankfulness and love.

But all tiese heaties and perfections of nature were lost on Mrs. Walton. Her thoughts were busy with the past, while her heart yearned to wards her daughter. She felt the time had come when deep lessons, which errors and sufferings had engraved on her own heart, must be told to Clara. The sweet girl was leaning beside the open window, the pale roses that drooped over her head not so white as her check. Yet she shed no toxy breathed to a sich, her even wore, in truth, bright. breathed no sigh; her eyes were, in truth, bright, as though she had nerved her soul for some deep sacrifice of self at the shrine of duty.

But what will you do? What will become of you and poor Henry? You have no longer strength to work—nay, hear me, dear mother—we must leave this cottage immediately. Mr.
Forester will come soon, and I would not for the world he should find me here.

She spoke this hurriedly, for there was a right ling among the shrubbery near the window, which opened to the ground, and she thought round one was coming in. They listened.

'It is only Henry, gathering his evening of fering of flowers, 'axid Mrs. Welton, and Clafa resumed.

'I have thought of every plan, but I do not and 'Mother!'

You have never heard, then, of Mrs. Walton's idiot son I' Mrs. Conant assured her she had not. Well, then, said Mrs. Bell, in her rambling way, 'Clara Walton is very beautiful and very bright, and that makes it more strange that poor Henry should be so ill shapen and dell.
