

THE PRINTERS' HOUR OF PEACE.

Know ye the Printer's hour of peace?
Show ye an hour more fought with Joy, Then ever did the mind of Greece.

'A Tartar.—On the last trip of a little coasting steamer from the mouth of Cahoon to this port, the clerk, actuated by a spirit of devilry, hailed a gigantic flat-boatman.'
'Hello,' cried the clerk, 'what port are you bound for?'
'Wheel Bush,' replied the boatman.

'A Wife, as a wife' has been found in one Kitty Malone, who was brought before the Police Court, Boston, for breaking up all the plates in her husband's kitchen while he was in bed.'
'Dream Book.—It is very lucky for an Editor, or, in fact, any business man, to dream of mosquitoes; it betokens success and the best of success.' For a tailor's dream of being imprisoned is a gentle admonition that his lot of cabbage was altogether too extensive.

'Situations Wanted.—Wanted, by a young gentleman of elegant manners, and captivating exterior, a situation in a drygoods store, in some fashionable and cry-ed throughout, where he may be endowed by his handsome address, to make an impression on the female customers, and by his graceful exterior, to be gratifying to his individual feelings, and a source of profit to his employer. He is well practised in the graceful evolutions of counter-jumping, and can raise an unequaled sensation in female bosoms, by his unique arrangement of his hair and whiskers. His teeth are exceptional, his smile perfectly killing, and his brow irresistible. To these accomplishments are added that fluency of persuasive eloquence, which has never failed to invest those who have been subjected to his charms with a desire to be his.
