On give me back my heart, I pray;
I would not have it Love now;
I would not to Beauty's sway,
It should yield and bow.
In former and in brighter years,
With fervent vows and scalding tears,
Before a shrine of mortal mould imbly kneeling, truth revealing, ouring out each immost feeling, Its sweet hopes were told. Since theo close shut within my breast, Sad and weary—full of grief; That stricken heart has found no rest, From torture no reliof.

But do not lure it now away,
'T were better far it there should stay,

And bear the throb of present wo— Than regaining loves enchaining, Feel its bitter pangs remaining, And no mercy know. Yet believe me, did'st thou love me,
And would'st cherish that poor heart;
It might leave me and not move me,
Tho' lived by Beauty's Art.
Nor would I break its charmed rest. Not would stoke in the breast,
No more to sorrow and to mourn—
But unreplaint — soul refining—
In sweet peace for age! reclaining,
There should be its bourne.
