By putting clover in small, compact heaps as soon as cut, and without exposing it to the sun, it will heat, and the greater part of the moisture will be evolved in gasses, in from twelve to twenty-four hours. As soon as these piles become heated to a degree that the temperature is above that of the hands when inserted into them, they may be opened and spread to the sun for a short time, and then taken to the mow, or if the weather should be wet, and piles well built, so they will turn the rain, they may stand without injury until the hay is completely cured, and ready to be housed as soon as the out side of the piles is dry. By this method much labor and anxiety are saved, and a better, although not so bright a hay, as if cured in uninterrupted sunshine, is secured. The same plan may be adopted with advantage in curing any hay. Every practical farmer knows that there is a great risk of having his grass injured by rain when spread to the sun, if partially dry, and the danger of it heating and rotting, if put into a mow in large quantities, so that gasses evolved by CURRANT BUSHES.

as well be made trees as shrubs, I have concluded to tell you how I have seen it done. In the spring of 1831, my father commenced a garden, and among other things set cuttings for currant bushes. I determined to make an experiment on one of these cuttings; and as soon as it grew I punched off all the leaves except the top turft, which I let grow. The cutting was about fourteen iuches high, and during the summer the sprout from the top of this grew perhaps ten inches. . The pext spring I pinched off all the leaves to about half way up to the first year's growth, so as to leave the lowest limbs about three feet from the ground. It branched well, and became a nice little dwarf tree. When it was more productive than any bush in the garden, and the fruit larger; it was less infected by spiders, and other insects ; chickens could not pick off the fruit ; and weeds were more easily kept from about the roots, and it was an' ornament instead of a blemish!-

SOAKING SEEDS.

Professor Mapes, whose farm is in the immediate vicinity of this city, recommends in the Working Farmer the soaking of seeds before planting, in a solution of water and ?

carbonate of ammonia. Mr. James Campbell, of Weston, in this State, has steeped his corn and other seeds in this solution for several seasons past, and is convinced that it not only hastens the germination and more perfect development, but a larger crop will be produced by the practice.-Newark [N. J.]
