SATURDAY, APRIL 23, 1853. THE MINERS JOURNAL Las a la ger circulation than any other Novemper pub-lished in Northern Pennsylvania. It circulates among the Caal, Iron and business men, not only in this and the adjoining counties, but in all our cites, and it also circulates largely among the masses in Schnylkill county, which renders it one of the moit valable Advertising mediugn in the County. But few papers have so many cipi-talists exrolled on its subscription list.

IMPORTANT FROM MEXICO. The latest arrivals from Mexico rumour a war between that country and the United States. Governor Lane had issued a proclamation claiming the Mecilla Valley, now held by Mexico, as a portion of the American territory, though left out, as he asserts by the neglector oversight of Commissione Sartolett. He had accordingly ordered Col. Sumner to take possession of the Valley with an armed force, but the Colonel refused. The Mexicans, in the meantime, had sent a body of several hundred troops to take possession of the spot in dispute and resist its occupancy by our people, at any sacrifice.-" Observer," of the Ledger, remarked ome time ago that the Administration would most likely let Cuba alone, but that a proressire demonstration of some sort might be expected shortly, in relation to Mexico. -We presume this is it.

delusion is filling our Insane Asylums—no the 4th just., Lord John Russell, stated the less than seven persons in a few weeks, in intentions of the government with regard to different sections of the country, have became insane in consequence of witnessing place into an elaborate description of the origin and participating in them, and are now consequence of witnessing place into an elaborate description of the origin and growth of the present system, he quoted the statistics of the Registrar General country; and he called particular attention to a fact—which he believed he could safely assume—that the poorer classes themselves contributed nearly half a million a year towards the education of their children. Under these circumstances the government considered that they should rather strengthen, and improve the present tried system than set up a new plan in its place. He alluded to the training schools as an important element of that system, and considered that provision should be especially power to withdraw their children from any school to the religious instruction of which they might be exposed. In districts where there were no municipal corporations, it was grant a certain sum per head for each child attending the schools; and to make further provision for those poorer places where there may be a want of means for the maintenance of such establishments. It was also proposed to, appoint a committee of the Privy Council, with certain control over and general powers to propose means for the reform of charitable trusts. The subjects of science and art, which had been mentioned in the and art, which had been mentioned in the royal speech, also came into the plan of the government, who proposed that the sums now granted to the schools of design and for purposes of science should be united in one department under the Board of Trade, to be called the Department of Science and Art, by which he believed that, without any great expenditure, valuable aid would be given to the cause of education. With regard to the universities, the government would not the universities, the government would not propose any particular scheme until the sentiments and suggestions of those bodies had been more fully heard. At the same time they considered, with regard to the University of Oxford, that some important changes were necessary in its government, by which it should embrace a larger proportion of those engaged in teaching in the various colleges; also, that some provision should be made for extending the advantages and dis-tinctions of the Universities to persons not the restrictions upon the attainment of fel lowships; and for the employment of a lar-ger proportion of the incomes of the various colleges for purposes of instruction. At the same time the government did not intend to legislate until they had heard the suggestions of the universities, in the absence of which they reserved to themselves, the right of submitting a measure to the House. Lord John concluded by asking for leave to bring in a
