Scientific. COMETS.

Their Composition, History and Movements The recent appearance of a celestial stranger in the sky, has revised the popular innegat in comets, their history and movewas first discovered on the 10th of June last, at Gottengen, by Mr. Klinkerfues, and it is regarded as remarkably bright and beautiful. A few nights since, its distance from the earth was calculated at 70,000,000 of miles, and from the sun 30,000,000. The dismeter of the nucleus was 11 seconds of arc, and the length of the come, 52 minutes.— The passage of the penhelion has already occurred or is about to take place. The present, therefore, is an admirable time to examine it. Comets, according to Sir Richard and Philips, are moving masses of transphrent fluids or vapors, which accend from high angles of 40% to 85%—towards the plane of maximum solar force; and are there turned by that force, into another line of motion like an orbit. These are related to the properties of the proprieties of life, and in the tender sense of duty to both God and persons testified to their authenticity, that we were extremely desirous of seeing him; for instance: Capi.
