On his ascension to the throne, the Sultan sends all his father's womankind away to the Eski Serai, or old Palace, and proceeds to make his own selections. This was said to be done by marching down a long line of blooming and unveiled beauties, and toss-blooming and unveiled beauties, and tossing a ha dkerchief to the most captivating. But "the charming Mary Montagu," in one of her letters to her sister, the Countess of Mar, speaking of an interview, at Adrian-ople, with the ex-Sultana Hafiteh, says this is a mistake. "The Sultana assured me," she writes, "that the story of the Sulfabulous, and the manner upon that occa-sion, is no other than this: he sends the Kislar Aga to signify to the young lady the honor he intends her. She is immediately complimented on it by the others, and led to the bath, where she is perfumed and dressed in the most magnificent and become and perhaps, in time, pretenders to the ing manner.
