Cull not from field or bower
The violet or animone,
Bring not the orange flower;
For the fairy roke that is gally worn,
The ring and the whipered vow,
The lighted hall and the festal strain,
Seem mockery to me now.

Strong is the heart that hath bowed to mine, Pure is the love it hath given; But never here shall the vow be paid.

Though it-hath been heard in Heaven.

We lighted love's torch 'neath an evil star, That gleamed from an angry sky, nd steady it burns, though it lights fond hearts Whose hope and joy must die.

But seek for me in the shaded dell,
The lily pure and white,
And some pale blue flower, whose loving eye
Droops in the mid-day light;
And cull the young geranium leaves,
With the glossy myrtle's stem.
And the opening bud of the fragrant rose,
And twine a wreath with them. Twine them not for the lighted hall:

Twine them not for the lighted hall,
Where the smile and the song go round,
But twine them for a darksome room,
Where silence is profound;
And wreathe them on a marble brow,
Above strange, stilly eyes,
Where the lashes droop on the blue-veined check,
And no blush of passion lies;
Twine them amid the raven locks

Dumorous. AN ENORMOUS ÆRONAUT. A late French Journal relates the following story, which will be seen, is French all over, besides being immensely funny: While Mons, Godard was filling an immense balloon in the champ de Mars, he amused the spectators by sending up the small figure of a man, the perfect resemblance of M. Thiers, without the spectacles. The little man being filled with gas, rose majestically into the air, and was soon lost to view among the clouds. His adventures, which became known next day were curious. Thanks to a strong and favorite gale, which impelled him on his course, the little balloon man arrived the same afternoon in sight of a country house, in the neighborhood of Bievro. It was near the hour of dinner, and the lady of the mansion, who naturally thought herself perfectly safe, was occupied in the mysteries of her toilet. It was warm day, and she had opened one of the windows, which looked out upon the park, and, was safe from any prying eyes. While tranquilly engaged, by the aid of a corset-lacing, in reducing her waste to a size and shape, that would reflect credit on her husband's taste, she was suddenly startled by a blast of wind, followed by a strange noise; and immediately the casement was thrown open, and our little balloon man entered her chamber unannounced. The lady utters a ery of terror, and throws a shawl over her shoulders. The little man; driven by the wind, throws himself upon the unhappy woman, who screamed louder than ever, pushes him off, and he conceals himself under the Just as the wife, in a supplicating voice, "Ah, Monsieur, go away, you will ruin ine!" "Ah! the wretch, I have him now!" and goes in search of his sword to run him through the body. The wife more dead than alive reiterates,
