> Messes. EDS. :- Allow me to present to your renders a brief and hasty skotch of Orwigsburg; a place that is just emerging from a dark cloud that has for some time enshrouded and concealed it from public notice. It is a place that has herefore been unknown save to its own quiet citizens and near neighbors. The name but a short time since was unknown to me. But having been called to the Coal regions on business, my course hap-poned by chance rather than by intention to be directed through the above mentioned place. I stopped at the Arcadian House where I was entersined in a manner that would have done credit to some of the first hotels in larger and more re nowned places. After partaking of some refresh-ments, I strolled out into the village. In passing along the street all was quiet, there was none o hat noise and bustle, none of that hurrying and fro, which disturbs the repose of most other towns and villages, especially business marks. The streets are wide, clean and adorned with ide trees; the houses, though not nodelled after the most modern style of architec ture, bear the impress of neatures. As I walked leisurely along I soon reached the outmost limits of the villago, and ascending a hill which arose gradually from the Southeastern part of the town, the most pleasing prospect presented itself to view that I ever beheld. 7I have often revelled upon he banks of the world renowned Hudson, and feasted my imagination upon its romantic scenery, but never was my mind so forcibly impressed with the beanties of nature as at this time. The road was lined on either side with beautiful groves planted and reared by nature's own hand; in the valley beneath lay spread the fields and mea waving with their rich crops of growing harvest, and orchards of choice fruits. Beyond this valo is a mountain of considerable height which adds
