HYENA BLACKSMITH .- In Abyssinia the trade of blacksmith is hereditary; and considhorror and alarm they began almost immediately to perceive that the metamorphosis was actually taking place, and that the black smith's skin was assuming the hair and color of the hyena, while his head and limbs took the shape of that animal. When the change was complete he grinned and laughed at them, and then retired into the neighboring thickets. They had remained, as it were, rooted to the place from sheer fright; but the mo-ment the hideous creature withdrew they made the best of their way home. Few people will venture to molest or offend a blacksmith, fearing the effects of his resentment. The greater part of the "possessed" are women; and the reason of their being attacked is, often, that they have despised the proffered love of some Bouda, or for other similar cause. Men, however, are by not means exempt; and of this I have seen sev.
