BBOILED MACKEREL .- The following good story BROILED MACKEREL.—The following good story is told of a member of Congress from Ohio: The venerable General H— was for several consecu-tive years returned to Congress; and as the hotels and boarding-bouses in Washington in those days were all on a par, or rather below par, the mem-bers were in the habit of occupying, year after year, the same rooms. The table of General H——'s boarding-bouse (which was kept by a widdy and how a weep thy a widow and her two daughters) was regularly fur nished with stereotyped dinners, and at one end of the table always appeared a broiled mackerel. General H----, whose seat was near the fish, had gazed so frequently upon it, (for it never was touched except by the cook,) that he knew it all "by heart." Now if the distinguished representative had any one peculiar virtue, it was an affee tionate desire to make overy creature around him happy. In the course of time Congress adjourned, and General H—— paid his bill to the widow, and got ready to start for home. The stage stood at the door; and the old gentleman, showing the goodness of his heart, took the widow by the hand, pressed it, and bade her farewell; then kissing the daughters, said he would like to see them in Ohio, daughters, said he would like to see them in Ohio, and furnish them with good husbands, etc. But even this is not all: the black boys who stood along the walls, were not forgotten, and grinned as he handed each a silver dollar. As he passed around the breakfast table, which was not yet where a for "be car bit wild friand the mackets and seling all the more goods.
