COURAGE. BY BLEET CORNWALL. Courage!-Nothing can withsta Courage!—Nothing can withstand Long a wrong'd, undanted land! If the hearts within her to True unto themselves and thee, Thou freed giant, Liberty! Oh! no mountain nymph art thou, When the helm is on thy brow, And the sword is in thy hand, Fighting for thy own good land! Courage!—Nothing e'er withstood Freemen fighting for their good; Armed with all their fathers fame, They will win and wear, name. That shall go to endless glony, Like the gods of old Grock story. Raised to heaven and heavenly worth. For the good they gave to earth. Courage!—There is none so poor None of all who wrong endure None so humble, none so weak, But may flush his father's cheek,

And his maiden's dear and true.
With the deeds that he may do
Be his days as dark as night.
He may make himself a light.
What! though anuken be the san
There are stars when day is done Courage!—Who will be a slave,
That has strength to dig a grave,
And therein his fetters hide,
Aut lay a tyrant by his side!
Courage!—Hope, howe'er he fly
For a time, can secen die!
Courage, therefore, bother men!
Cry's' God?" and to the fight again!

THE FOOTSTEP ON THE STAIRS.

Only in the hour of grief and sorrow—only when desolation and death had fallen; upon the cause of grief and sorrow—only when the solit was about to quit its bold in life—then it was, and then alone, that the footstep was peared upon the stairs! General the footstep was peared upon the stairs!

The wailing of bending trees winging to and fro in the strong grasp of the spirit of the storm could be heard without, if death hovered over the au-cient mansion of the Grandons, it echoed through cient mansion of the Grandons, it echoed through the huge old hall.

In the stillness of night, in the broad glare of day, whether death approached beneath the shad on of the home-walls, or far off in a foreign land —no matter; when the Destroyer's hand rested on the brow of one of that family, so surely resounded that footstep, slow, solemn and ghestly, echoing and re-ceboing throughout the huge old hall within the ancient mansion of the Grandons.

And its history was raid to have been this:

Long, long years agone, Geoffrey Grandon was holder of the name and possessions of the family. He was a stern, sawrthy man, upon whose brow vil passions had left their deep impress, and in whose glittering black eye might be read a cruel and malignant disposition. Mabel, his wife, was one of those gentle beings whom fate at times seed for two gentle beings whom fate at times seed forever."

But also there was no change in his meanner towards herself; the little comer was no bond to draw him one iota towards herself. She gazed long and fixell upon the infault's face with a strange, ghostly hue. He went softly towards it, and took gently upon him as he stood playing with the child; and as she read her doom of a lifetime of further wrong and indignity, she sank helplessly back upon the pillow with a sigh of atter wee.

She saw it still more when, some time after; he brought into the house a woman who seemed to yule all things by the power-of her will. It was a long time before she even dreamed in her guitters as long time before the couch, while his heart he looked closer on the life form, and the awful truth burst upon him—his child was dead?

Alfred, the eldest was now past his majority, and was wandering in a foreign land. With some, a love of the beauties and novel sights, and with others, a desire for the depravites which are with others, a desire for the deprayltes which are not to be found at home, are the incentives to this, wandering; with him it was decidedly the latter that urged him on.

They heard but little of him or his doings; for in those days man had not yet chained the lightning, bidding it journey to and fro as his messenger, and save only when the heir of Grandon stool in need of money, his whereabouts was most forwardly a matter of conjecture. And the tapestry upon the walls swayed mournfully to and fro, as theugh walling for this anatham in that had descended on the house. The night-involve hirthcad without, and the sullan roar of the sea afar off seemed to repeat it, while the winds here it to his cars again, "A curre them rests upon thee and upon thy house forever!"

To one of the vast chambers in the proad manifold of the cars, and extended in all the submility of death, lies the gentlewoman who had borne the empty titles of its mistress. None knew assuredly the cause of her death; but the stronters exchanged frightened glances one with another, as though each bore a fearful susping couch, and while they sorrowfally watched her faining breath, and the dews of dissolution gathered upon her fair brow, they had all been structled by hearing at intervals a slow and solemn footstep on the stairs, echolog dismally through the hall without. And as they went to discover who this introder might be thus pacing: to and fro in the dead stillness of the night, they gazed in one another's faces in blank dismay at finding to sold visible.

And yet the door once more closed and silence the first of the unhappy lady, it was constantly heard pacing through the dost of the content, again was it reigning through the dost of the content, again was it has been a heavy forter. Still another picture: A child of twelve years old wanders by the verge of a cliff, overhanging an abyss of some hundred feet in depth. Its attendant, sented beneath a pleasant shade, takes little heed of his wanderings, nor notes his near approach towards the dangerous spot. A noise of crumbling earth at length attracts his attention, and he sees with horror that his charge is but fast and he sees with horror that his charge is but just sinking with the unstable earth, and as he gazes spell-bound on the sight, beholds him suddenly disappear from his view. With wild cries nasis-tance is summoned, and the mangled form is borne to its home benesh the room of Geoffrey Grandon, and laid tenderly upon a couch.

Miscellann. Secretary of the Board:—The Secretary, whether appointed District Superintendent or not, is the chief executive officer of the Board, and as such, chief executive officer of the Board, and as such, he should make it his business to see that all needful preparations are duly made for the opening of the fall and winter schools. Public notice should be given of the time the schools of the district will open, so that parents can have the children's shoes and stockings and other clothing ready, and text books provided, in order that pupils may commence punctually on the first day of the term. He should see that the school houses are in order, broken windows mended, general rethe tarm: He should see that the school houses are in order, broken windows mended, general repairs made, and fuel provided. Where the board have engaged the teachers, the Secretary should see that a written contract be entered into with each one, so as to avoid dispute and consequent ill-feeling afterwards. Blank contracts can readily be procured of the printers at the county seat for a mere trifle. They will save much labor and assure greater accuracy. The collector and treasurer, should also be looked after, in order that funds may be at hand to punctually meet the funds may be at hand to punctually most the teachers' wages and incidental expenses.

This forethought may be a little troublesome This forethought may be a little troublesome but will save a vast deal more of trouble and perplexity in the outcome. And at any rate, public duties are of public importance, and not to be lightly regarded; and if any incumbent is not entailed with the daties belonging to his position, nothing can be easier than to vacate the post, and permit it to be filled by some one who will not shrink from its responsibilities.

The Secretary should, however, receive a reasonable compensation for his services, wherever sonable compensation for his services, wherever the resources of the district will justify it. Uniformity of Text Books:—The provisions of the 25th Section of the Act of 1854, were intendthe 25th Section of the Act of 1854, were intended to secure good text-books and exclude poor ones, but more especially to establish a local sai-formity, for the reason, that without such uniformity, pupils cannot be arranged in suitable classes, and the different branches taught to the best advantage. Without proper classification, the efforts of the teacher can accomplish but little practical good for the school; and the tehool term results in little better than a loss of time and money for all parties.
