"That's fair," shouted the crowd, and off went Ned, with a committee of eight, over, across, and up into the steeple. The crowd was watching the open space by the bell, and in about three minutes after the party entered the church, Ned's cbcoanut was seen bobbing up and down in the belfry like a dandy-jack. It was ovident to all that he jumped up there. "Bold by thunder !" mid the two-to-one gentlesan, and sloped. "Taken in and done for !" exclaimed sporting man, and sloped. entleman number two. "Give it up !" yelled four-to-one, and cut stick. "Fairly won !" sung out everybody, in chorus; and as Ned made his appearance in the street, the erowd gave him three theers and dispersed.

The stake builders handed over the money to Ned, and we adjourned with the old merchant to his store, where he made a fair division of the winnings all round, after which the old fox told us that he had an idea in his head once of trying by mail that very game.
