Joined in the husband of the matron, the brother of Blanche's mother, or the commander of the skation, and the matron, the brother of Blanche's father.

Golonel Philip Bertrand, Glod bleas him for a true flear—and Blanche is just like him.

By this time the parties had reached the beat; and the yo and all of them—even should you know the pleaders to be of your own kin; for in such a case your own brother might deceive you—not wiffelly and voluntarily, perhape—but because of being gooded en by the savages, themselves concealed. Yes, such things have been known as one friend being thus used to lure another to his destruction; and so be cauticus, vigilant, brave and true, and may the good God keep you from all harm!"

As be finished speaking, Blanche proceeded to take an affectionate leave of all, receiving many a tender message for her parents from those who held them in love and veneration; and the boat swang out, and began to float down with the current, now fairly entered upon the most dangerous portion of a long and perilous journey.

The father of Blanche, Colonel Philip Bertrand, was a native of Virginia, and a descendant of one of the Huguenot refugee, who fied from their natival and after the revocation of the Nantz in 1655. He had been an efficer of some note during the Revolution—a warm political and perionnl friend of the author of the Declaration of Independence—and a gentleman who had always stood high in the esteem of his associates and cotemporaries.

Though at one time a man of wealth, Colonel Winter, in the regular passage which led length.

At this moment Bugene heard his name pronounced by a voice that seldom failed to excite a peculiar emotion in his brasst, and now sent a sing below, he found Blanche, fally deressed, with an light in her hand, standing just outside of her cabin, in the regular passage which led length.

sion of his grant, the Colonel had shoots immediately erected a first, and offered such inducements to settlers as to speedily collect around him quite a little community—of which, as a matter of course, he became the head and chief; and to supply the wants of his own family and others, and increase his gains in a legitimate way, he had opened a store, and filled it with goods from the Eastern marks, which goods were transported by and over the mountains to the Kanawha, and thence by water to the Falls of the Ohio, whence their removal to Fort Betrand became an easy matter. To purchase and ship there goods, and deliver a pyckage of letters to friends in the East, Eugene had been thrice dispatched—his third commission also extending to the escotting of the beautiful heirses, with her servants, to her new home. This last commission had been so far executed at the time chosen for the opening of our story, as to bring the different parties to the mounts of the great Kanawha, whence the reader has seen them slowly floating of upon the still, glasses we besom of "the bolle of rivers."

"We wants a live and to Maris is already butchered and scalped!"
And even as he spoke, as if in confirmation of his dreadful intelligence, there arose a series of his dreadful intellig peace which acknowledged the United Colonies of America a free and independent nation.

At the landing of the fort, on the day our story opens, was fastened a flat-bont of the kind used by the early navigators of the Western rivers.

Upon the deck of this bont, at the moment we present the scene to the reader, stood five individing occurring worthy of note, until near four o'clock, when, as Blanche was standing.

Dick; "but we're it for't that's sartin, and I s'pose we'll have to make the best on't."
"But what is to be done?—what do you advise?" tie up."

"No, no," said Eugene, positively; "that will never do! I would not think of such a thing for a moment! We must think of such a thing for a moment! We must think of such a thing for a moment! We must think of such a thing for a moment! think of such a thing for a moment! We must keep in the current by all means!"

Ef you can," rejoined the boatman; "but when it gits so dark, as we can't tell one thing from t'other, it'll be powerful hard to do; and ef we don't run agin a bar or bank afors morning, in pite of the best o'us, it'll be the luckiest go that ever I had a hand in. See, Cap'n—it's thickening up fast; we can't see cyther bank at all, nor, the water nyther; the sists is gettin' dim, and it looks as if there war a cloud all round us."

"I see!" see turned Eugene, excitedly.—
"Merciful Heaven't I hope no accident will befall us here—and yet my heart almost misgives me!—for this, I believe is the most dangerous part of our journey—the vicinity where most of our boates have been captured by the savagee."

Saying this, Eugene hastened below, where he found the other bisatmen sleeping so soundly as to require considerable effort, on his part, to waks them. At last, getting them slirly roused, he instranted them, already and many properties. The most dangerous part of require considerable effort, on his part, to waks them.
