NEW PATENT WATER-WHEEL. THE undersigned are manufacturing a new kind of Water-Wheel, patented May 11th.
1658, by J. H. Parscuild, of Verment. It involves an entirely new principle of obtaining bower, and of controlling the water by which we obtain a greater maximum power than is afforded by any other advantages of this Wheel new in use. Some of the advantages of this Wheel are: water.
2d. There is less deed weight to move, the wheel and shaft weighing less than 150 lbs.
3d. It surpasses all other wheels in motion, velocity and power amount where we will be worken and power when used to drive a large or small amount of machinery—as the strength of the wheel is not diminished by reducing its motion, since it depends upon the social of the column of water below the wheel, which always remains about the same.

5th. It occupies jors space than any other wheel, is placed inside the flume near the surface of the water and is never affected by frost.

6th. The wheel is very durable, being made of iron, and can be put in any place and attached to faw Mills, Grist Mills and machinery of all kinds with leasexpense than any other wheel, the velocity of the wheel is such that the expense of gearing up is avoided for mearly ul arposes. Together with the advantages above stated we are ty to warrant the Wheel to possess a power equal following figures, for each foot fall of water the cure of Dyspepsy, than any medicine that has ever been prepared in any age or any clime, to the same purpose.

Having submitted it, with an explanation of its components to a number of Ehysicians of Philadelphia, among whom were the late Drs. Joseph Hartshorne and J. C. Morton, it has received their entire approval, and many of the Medical Faculty are now not only prescribing it for their patients, but are using it themselves, personally, and in their families. As a conic, it is unequalted, and its properties are of so invigorating, a nature, that it is given with perfect salety and success to the most tender infants.

THE WINTER OF LIFE. The snow of Winter gently falls, And whitene o'er the ground; Thus, with the snowy wreaths of time The brow of age is bound, Time never heeds the pain or grief Which human nature feels; No backward movement ever makes But onward rolls its wheels; Regardies of the bitter wait
Of hearts by augusts stren;
The songs of youth, the 'plaints of age,
Unbeeded, rise to Heaven. Oh, could we find the fabled spring which would our routh restore; Or gase, like travelers outward bound. On the receding shore;

Better to bear with cheerful heart.
The change that time may bring.
And garner treasures for old age.
Than sigh for endless Spring. Treasures of fallh, and hope and love, Presty to morials given; Death will restore our youthful bloom— There's no old age in Heaven.

MRL B. S ALARMS. Mrs. B. is my wife; and her starms are those produced by a detailon under which she labors, that there are assession, gnomes, vampires or what not in our house at night, and that it is my boun-den duty to leave my bed at any bour or temperature, and to do battle with the same, in every inadequate apparel. The circumstances which attend Mr. B. a shruss are generally of the following kind. I am awakened by the mention of my baptismal name, in that peculiar species of whisper which has something uncanny in its very na-ture, herides the dismatherentiations which belong to it, from the fact of its being used only in meldramas and sick rooms: "Henry, Henry,"

How many tiges she has repeated this, I know not; the sound fails on my ear like the lapping of a bundred waver, or as the "Robin Crusce, Robin Crusce" of the parrot smote upon the ear of the terrified islander of Defoe; but at last I wake, to view by the dim fire-light, this vision:
Mrs. B. is sitting up beside me, in a listening attitude of the very intensest kind; her night-cap (one with cherry-colored ribbons, such as it can be no harm to speak about) is tucked back behind be no narm to speak anount is taken do a bentou either ear; her hair—in paper—is, rolled out of the way upon each side like a banner furled; her eyes are rather wide open and her mouth very much so; her fingers would be held up to com-mand attention, but that she is supporting herselt in a comewhat absurd manner upon her hands.
"Heavy, did you hear that?"

"What, my leve?"
"That noise, there it is again; there—there." The disturbance referred to is that caused by a mouse nibbling at the waistcot; and I venture to say so much in a tone of the deepest conviction.
"No, no, Henry it's not the least like that: its a file working at the bar of the pantry-window.—
I will stake my existence, Henry, that is a file." "staked her existence" that night that she heard the area gate "got." When I consider the extremely free and onconstrained manner in which I was received, poker and all, by that assembly, my only surprise is that they did not signify their arrivals by double knocks at the front door.

On one mannerable right and one and have form of words, I know that opposition is usaless. I rise, and put on my dressing gown. Mrs. B. re-fuses to let me have the candle, because she will die of terror if she is left alone without a light. She puts the poker into my hand, and with a gen-tle violence is about to expel me from the chamtle violence is about to expel me from the chamber, when a sudden thought strikes her.

"Stop in bit, Henry," she exclaims, "until I have looked into the cupboard and places;" which she proceeds to do mest minutely, investigating even the short drawers of a foot and a half square. I am at length dismissed upon my perilous errand, and Mrs. B. looks and double locks the door believed to the control of the cont the front drawing room; and they've just knocked down the parrot-screen."

My expedition therefore combines all the dangers of a sally, with the additional disadvantage of having my retreat into my own all disadvantage of having my retreat into my own fortress cut off. Thus cumbrously but ineffectually caparitioned, I perambulate the lower stories of the house in darkness, in search of that disturter owners in darkness, in search of that disturter owners in darkness, in search of that disturter of Mrs. B. a sproper, which, I am well convinced is behind the wainscot of her own apartment, and nowhere class. The pantry, I need not say, is as it is the grave, and about as cold. The great clock in the kitchen looks spectral enough by the light of the expiring embers, but there is no fainty at the countless numbers over my naked ankless. The drawing room door was ajar, and through the crevice I could distinguish despite the gleotin, as many as three muffled figures. There is a noise in the ceilar such as Mrs. B. would at once identify with the suppressed converse of anticipative burglars, but which I recognise in a moment as the dripping of the small-beer cash, whose tap is troubled with a nervous disorganization of that kind. The dining-room disorganization of that kind. The dining-room disorganization of that kind. One of them stole cautiously towards the door where I was standing.—
I heard his burglarious foet, I heard the "Hearry, Hearry!" atill going on from above stairs; I heard my own heart pit-a-pat, pit-a-pat within me. It was one of those moments in which one lives a room, then, but three hours and a haif ago; it cer-tainly does not took like the same room now.— The drawing-room is slee far from wearing its usual sang and comfortable appearance. Could we possibly have all been sitting in the relative was one of those proments in which one lives a life. The head of the craped marsuder was projected cantiously round the door, as if to listen.

I poised my weapon, and brought it down with unerring aim upon his skuil. He fell like a bullock bening him he are; and I sped up to my bedbamber, with all the coiselessness and celerity of a bird. It was I who locked the door this time, and plied the wasthead stand, two band-boxes, and a chair against is with the speed of light.

Casting Heavy Guzz.—It is mentioned in a late London peper that all the guzz cast at the ning. we possibly have all been sitting in the relative positions to one and other which these chairs assume? Or since we were there, has some spiritual company sith no eye for order left among them, taking advantage of the remains of our fire to hold a re-usion? They are here even at this moment perhaps, and these gentlemen have not yet come up from the dining room. I shudder from head to foot, partly at the bare idea of such a thing, partly from the naked fact of my exceedingly unclothed condition. They do say that in the very passage which I have now to cross in order to get to Mrs. B. again, may great grandfather "walks;" in compensation, I suppose, for having been prevented by gout from taking that species of exercise while he was alive. There are more things in heaven and earth than see dreamt of in

And, indeed, some heavy body did there and then jump upon our bed, and off again, at my wife's interjection, with extreme agility. I thought Mrs. B. would have head a st, but she hade's.— It is called the "Forbes McKensie Act," from this same of its author. Its influence has proved beneffetal in every way, but in none more than in essening disorder, drenkenness and crime on Sunday. AN EXCELLENT IDEA .- Probably one of the most effective and reliable works on the evils of Slavery ever issued in this country, is, "Helper's Impending Crisis of the South." It has been rend South as well as North, and the facts it contains have yet to be controverted. It is based upon Gaston, one of Morth Carolina's noblest sons, who sity of the State, said ... Disguise the truth as we may, and throw the blame where we will, it is Siavery which, more than any other cause, keeps us back in the career of improvement. It stiffes industry and represses enterprise-it is fatal to economy and providence it discourages skill, Impairs our strength as a community, and polsons morals at the fountsin head." Mr. Helper in his work shows that in the South the non-slaveholding whites who are largely in the majority, have rights which should be but are not respected by been developed for giving wide circulation to a pamphint edition of the work; that a foud has been established to aid it, and that subscriptions to a large amount have already been received by the Hon.
