THE RESULT.

The country has spoken. Abraham Lincoln of Illinois has been elected President and Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine, Vice President, by majorities which must set at rest all factions opposite to the will of the people. This result is especially gratifying as the enemies of Lincoln to defeat him. The fears of many were not only awakened in regard to the perpetuity of the Union; but a financial panic was introduced into the programme, for political, personal and selfish ends. But the people have rebuked the demagogues who originated the base schemes, so decided a manner, that they will hardly dare to raise their heads in public.

However we turn from the disagreeable picture presented in the recent canvas, to the glorious spectacle of seventy thousand majority rolled up for Lincoln by Pennsylvania, of which our gallant County, so long in the hands of the unfaithful Democracy, has given over thousands. Always a conservative State, Pennsylvania is still eminent. Disputed with an Administration whose acts have been in opposition to her material interests; wedded to the interests of the white, not the negro race; and determined upon a change, she has spoken decidedly, with her sister States of the North. And her voice will be reported by every Southern State that recognizes Constitutional obligations. South Carolina may frost and fume her brief hour on the secession stage, but she stands in need of the assistance and countenance of the rest of the Southern States, which she cannot receive. For they will not take any steps toward disunion, until some attack shall have been made upon their rights. No such attack will be made under the Administration of Abraham Lincoln, for he has no idea warranting such an assault will be entertained by the Republican party. Were that the case, we would not be record to the majority given by Pennsylvania, which we do to-day. The people themselves, would regulate it.

Our Southern brethren will return to their duty, and be assured that their rights will be safe in the hands of Mr. Lincoln. He and his party are committed to the policy of the non-interference of slavery, not to interference with it where it exists. And that policy is approved by nine-tenths of the people of the South, were their opinions recently expressed. We have no fear of trouble arising out of the results of this election, for the mass of the people at the South, are Union-loving; they have too much to lose going off the Union, not to weigh the step well, even under provocation, before taking it; Mr. Lincoln will be a just, impartial administrator of the affairs of the country, and will before the expiration of the first year of his term of office, gain the entire confidence of the South; for he will prove to it that even if he had the power, he has not the disposition to infringe upon one item of its rights under the Constitution.

We regret that we are in a minority in both Houses of Congress, for it will impede in a measure, the total change and reform demanded in every department of the Government. A year or two, however, may after this phase, when the Republican party, trusted and respected, will have an opportunity of inaugurating all that we now need, including that desideratum, an adequate protective tariff.

The election of Lincoln is the happiest event which could have happened at this day. By one determined blow, the people have taught the disunionists a lesson; and laid at rest a question which can never in the future assume the formidable proportions which it did in the last campaign. For this let us thank the Master State, Pennsylvania, who is always sure first, that she is right, then goes ahead.
