TRIALS AND TRIBULATIONS.

Mem. Manchester is the "Lancashire" of the river.

[From the Chicago Post.]

My physical education has been sadly neglected. When I was a boy I had some experience in climbing apple trees and scaling picket fences, and once I succeeded in throwing a double somersault out of a hay-loft, on which occasion the stable-keeper's boss played the part of a spring-board. I had a passion for hay-lofts in the hey-day of my youth. I was in clover every time I got in one. But the physical exercise incident to my early experience in tree-climbing, picket-scaling and precipitate revolutions out of barn garrets, rather retarded than improved my muscular development; and the surgeo-muscular operation of taking a foot off my delicate figure when I was already as short as a boy of my age had any right to be, caused me in later years to avoid studiously any physical exertion that was not absolutely necessary to my health and well being.

Therefore,

Skating is a new thing to me. I never studied the art in my boyhood's sunny years, and I never practiced it; but I am prepared to assert from actual observations and experiments, by the subscriber, that skating is a humbug, and skating parks are a diabolical invention that could have belonged to no other age than the one in which we live.

I rejoice in the acquaintance of several young ladies who skate. They commenced as early as the last Fourth of July to persuade me to learn the glorious art; and they have prosecuted their endeavors unceasingly ever since. As the cold weather advanced, I became a little alarmed, and tried to convince them that it would be to their advantage to repudiate my friendship; but they insisted that I was an exceedingly proper young man, and cultivated me more intimately than ever. I began to think that summer all the year would be agreeble, notwithstanding philosophers have contended that if such were the case we would not know how to appreciate it. The first morning that I found ice in my pitcher I came near fainting; and when I saw an advertisement in the papers of skates for sale, it absolutely made me sick. I was not troubled, however, until Christmas day. I had made all necessary arrangements to spend that ancient anniversary in quiet, and was wending my way homeward very peaceably in the afternoon, when I was attacked by a bevy of my skating female friends with their arms full of skates. Flight was impossible. I had to face the music. I resorted to strategy in the first place, but it was a failure. Told them I had no skates. They offered to present me a pair. My gallantry was challenged and I could say no more on that head, but I begged them to go with me somewhere and let me practice a little on sawdust before I appeared in public on the ice; they refused, I told them if they would go home with me I would have my back yard flooded, and we would skate there till doomsday; but they had the skating park fever, and all of my propositions were powerless. Finally I became charitable, squandered the price of a pair of skates, and accompanied the importuning bevy to a skating park.

The first thing I did on entering the park was to laugh. I laughed vociferously (one of the young ladies said it was vociferously) to see how stupid I had been. Anybody could skate; I knew it as soon as I saw it. Why, it was just as easy! I spurned my tutors; I would have no dictatresses with petticoats; told them to stand aside; I could paddle my own canoe, and so forth. They stood aside; I paddled. I buckled on my skates and stood upright, with hope springing eternal in my human breast, and struck out boldly. In less than one-hundredth of a second afterwards I struck in boldly head foremost. I don't think I fell; but I believe that an acrobat, with a million triumphs in his favorite art clustering about his person, could not have performed the feat that I performed, and I believe that an experienced phrenologist could have examined the impression that my head made in the ice and drawn therefrom a very accurate map of my intellect. I was satisfied, and told my crinolined keepers that if they would crown me with laurels I would leave as soon as the gatekeepers would let me. They were not so impetuous as myself, and contended that I should stay awhile.

One profound little creature, with Satan in her eye, took me by the arm, and said I had nothing to fear; she would give me a lesson and make a skater of me. She would teach me the whole art in a remarkably short space of time; she would do anything in fact that any reasonable man could exact, and I went forth with her, feeling tolerably happy. We struck out moderately—she and I. She said something about putting the right foot foremost. I endeavored to follow her advice, but before I could accomplish my purpose I was in an excellent position to have a photograph of my feet taken with the sky for a background; and as I acquired that position (not gradual by any means) I heard one of my skates strike something considerably above the surface of the park. Two minutes later my tutor was on her knees, picking up her teeth which were scattered around so profusely that a greenhorn might have supposed on seeing them, that a farmer's wife had been shelling corn for chickens. One of her friends rushed to her and looked in her mouth to count the vacancies. I told her not to do it; I did not want to see anybody look down in the mouth on account of my calamities, and that was all the apology I made.

When I arose again it was with a determination not to skate any more till next season. I told the young ladies there was a conspiracy against me; somebody had poured oil on the ice to make it slippery, and I would not patronize a park where the proprietors would allow such indignities to be perpetrated. My guardians gathered around me and entreated me to try it "once more, just for fun." I told them I would try it for anything else but fun, which was incompatible with a skating park, provided they would furnish me with a balance pole and put some sealing wax on the bottoms of my skates. Another heroic woman, undaunted by the circumstance of a companion having been made toothless, volunteered as a substitute for a balance pole and sealing wax and dragged me out (against my will I pledge my honor) upon the ice again. Having profited a little by experience, as I thought I was determined not to put the right foot foremost any more, nor the left either. I stood erect and kept my feet together. We glided along very smoothly until we reached the centre of the park, when I became too confident and struck out all. I measured my length on a slippery foundation, and to add to my misery, I heard something tear just as I gained a horizontal position; and before I had been prostrated a minute I was sure from the inexpressible coldness of the ice as it came in contact with an exposed part of my person, that something had been torn. I could not get up, for fear of making myself ridiculous, and I concluded to lie there even though I melted my way into China. My feminine protector asked me if I was hurt, and why I didn't get up. I told her I was looking at the reflection of my face in the ice and it was so pretty I couldn't leave it. Meantime the ice got colder—especially in particular locality that will not admit of a geographical definition. I was convinced that the mercury in the thermometer was falling at the rate of several degrees a minute. The skating park was covered with people, two-thirds of whom I think, were women; and I am ready to express my settled conviction that every one of them was skating directly towards me. They skated over me and all around me, and among me, and through me and between me. So much affection did they evince for the spot where I was reposing that there was no doubt in my mind that I had fallen on good ice, which afforded some consolation. The ice got colder. I was tempted to get up, but there was a stronger temptation to stay where I was. I couldn't bear exposure. One thing annoyed me continually. Impetuous young ladies persisted in jumping over my head. Modesty compelled me to turn my face towards the interior of the earth occasionally, and it was very hard for me to turn my back on the fair sex when it caused me to rub my nose against cold ice.

I saw a fat woman coming—a fat woman on ice. Have you ever seen the spectacle? I hope not, unless you are proof against fear. A thousand thoughts rushed into my head at once, chief among which was a speculation as to the possibility and probability of a fat woman falling. I took one glance at her and buried my face in my hands to await my doom. I am too gallant, and possess too much respect for the sex of which I am an opposite, to dilate upon the enormity of the nether limbs of any fair creature, but I say boldly, that I did heartily wish, as I reclined on the ice, that I could have had one of that lady's hose to hang up the night before Christmas for Santa Claus to fill. She passed around me, and I was not demolished.

The ice got colder. I suffered excruciatingly. Young men cut pigeon-wings around me, and thrust their skates against my ribs occasionally, to keep my interest awake. There was music, and some of the young people were trying to go through the vicissitudes of a dance. I think from the pummeling they gave me, they kept time about as well as a drunken man running from a bear would have done.

At last, when human endurance could endure no more, and I was meditating with would be the better for me, to freeze to death or get up at all hazards, a fortunate circumstance occurred. A little lady, whose remonstrance I shall cherish every winter for the next twenty years at least, with Blondina on, and short skirts and high-heeled boots and red stockings, with black stripes running around them, or black stockings with red stripes running around them (they call them Balmorals, or some such name), floated dangerously near me, with a magnificent shawl hanging loosely about her shoulders and streaming gracefully out behind her. I went for the shawl, I clutched it frantically, and the lady was moving so rapidly that she was on the other side of the park before she missed it. I snatched a pen-knife from the desk pocket of my vest pocket, and cut the straps from about my feet, threw the skates as far as I could, and then, wrapping the shawl about my body, I went—home, if you please, and beat the city railroad cars.

I have nothing more to say about skating at present. I think ice is very useful in summer time with Sangaree and water, but in winter it is neither useful nor ornamental. I think a man who will put oil on ice to blast the prospects of a novice is no better than he should be, and I always will believe that saw dust is a better thing than ice for a new beginner. I have profited some by my experience. Should I ever, in any extremity, engage in the manufacture of ladies' stockings, I could, from the knowledge I gained on Christmas day, produce all the modern styles without paying for patterns.

I am, frigidly, BRAM HACKETT.

Something New in Philadelphia.

COOPER'S

Photographic and Art Gallery,

No. 1338 Chestnut Street,

Opposite U. S. Mint.

Gallery, Reception and Operating Rooms ALL ON FIRST FLOOR.

All styles and sizes of PHOTOGRAPHS, IVORY-TYPES, FERROTYPES OR "TINTYPES," and taken at prices to suit the times.

Pictures finished in WATER COLORS, OIL, INDIA INK, and PASTIL.

HORSES, and other animals, EQUIPAGES, CONSTRUCTIONS, MODELS OF MACHINERY, &c., for Patenting, accurately photographed.

P. F. Cooper desires to call the attention of persons visiting Philadelphia to his new Ground Floor Gallery, where he has introduced newly-patented cameras, capable of taking, in a few seconds, one hundred Photographs from the small stamp or autographic, to the Imperial Life Size.

After many experiments he has succeeded in placing his skylight at an improved angle, diffusing the light in equal proportions, and producing that soft gradation of tone which cannot be given by side and sky lights generally used, and which is of so much importance to the beauty of a picture. It is made of French glass, and is the largest in Philadelphia.

Mr. Cooper has been engaged more than twenty years in the study and practice of the Fine Arts. His long experience as a Miniature and Portrait Painter is a sufficient guarantee that the perfection of the pictures made
