Would call the attention of Railroad

Managers, and those interested in Railroad Property, to their system of Lotor motive Engines, in which they are adaption of the particular business for which they may be required; by the use of one, two, three or four pair of driving wheels; and the use of the whole, or so much of the weight as may be desirable for adhesion; and in accommodating them to the grades, curves, strength of superstruction, and rail and work to be done. By these means the maximum useful effect of the power is secured with the least expense for attendance, cost of fuel, and repairs to Road and Engine.

With these objects in view, and as the result of twentythree years practical experience in the business by our senior partner, we manufacture five different kinds of Engines, and several classes of sizes of cach kind.—

Particular attention paid to the strength of the machine in the plan and workmanship of all the details. Our long experience and opportunities of obtaining information, enables us to offer these engines with the assurance that, in efficiency, economy and durability, they will compare favorably with those of any other kind in use. We also furnish to order, wheels, axies, bowling or low moor tire (to fit centres without boring.) to offer the properties of every description of Copper, Sheet Iron and Boiler Works; and every article appertaining to the repair or renewal of Locomotive Engines.

THE TABLES TURNED; OR, HOW A DRY JOKER WAS JOKED.

BY THE CHANCELLOR. At the name of Cale Meeks, what reminiscences pass before our mental vision! Old recollections come crowding upon us and we see an array of the "sold" pass before our mind's eye, in the shape of seekers after the mythical Frank McLaughlin, the victims of croton oil and jalap, for the administration of which no medical reason existed, and a long line of those who have been humbingeed. At the name of Cale Meeks, what reminis line of those who have been humbugged generally without any specific regard to any specific species of sell. Cale was the prince of dry jokers; he lived, moved and had his of dry jokers; he lived, moved and had his being through a diurnal succession of sells; indeed his life was one great sell composed of a conglomeration of the infinitessimal sells of fifty years' duration. Now Bixby, Nathan Bixby, was one of Cale's truest and staunchest business acquaintances, although he had never been introduced into the domestic circle made glad by the portly presence of Mrs. Cale who was somewhat admestic circle made glad by the porty presence of Mrs. Cale who was somewhat addicted to jealousy. The reason for this lack of acquaintance was that she lived a secluded life in one of the little villages on Long Island and Nat Bixby lived in our babel of New York. Well, one day Cale was hard pushed for an object upon which to inflict a practical joke, and in his dilemma selected his friend Nat as his victim. The manner in which Nat was said I do not choose to particularly Nat as his victim. The manner in which Nat was sold I do not choose to particularly describe. Suffice it to say that under the play of Cale's exuberant fancy, Nat made a journey to Albany, insisted that a lady there had sent him an amatory epistle, which he produced. The lady became indignant, called in the sid of her husband who literally skinned Mr. Bixby, who thereafter returned to Gotham with a very adult flea in his auricular apparatus. This event happened his auricular apparatus. This event happened in the early spring time, and on a beautiful day. About a week after Nat's return from Albany he met Cale at Sherwood's. The sell was disclosed by Cale and a hearty laugh was had over Nat's mislay, and at his still bruised features, in which he joined; but those present noticed the fact that he didn't laugh an inch helow his chin; in truth it laugh an inch below his chin; in truth, it was generally believed that Nat's mirth was entirely simulated.

"Now, old fellow," said Cale," you don't hold any malice, do you?"
"Not a bit," answered Nat, "and in token of amity, let us take smiles all around."
Which they did in the usual manner.

"How did you come to town?" asked Nat. "I drove up in a light wagon." replied Cale. "And when will you return home?"
"About six o'clock this evening," respondd Caleb. Nat thereupon pleaded an engagement and left; but as soon as he was out of eyeshot of his joker friend, repaired to Gray's stable in Warren street, where he hired a fast horse and a light vehicle, and with which he started, through a bye-street, for the residence of his friend Cale, on Long Island. On arriving, he left his horse and wagon at a public house, and proceeded on foot to the aforesaid residence, where he inquired of the servent if Mr. Meeks was at home.

he knew, he would be, in the negative, he "This is, unfortunate. I wanted to pay him some money. If I could see Mrs. Meeks it would do as well; she could give me a receipt in the name of her husband." Mrs. M was frugal and industrious, and always attentive to her linsband's interests. As the last remark fell from the lips of Nat, a fine looking matron called from up the stairs to the servant, to "show the gentleman in the parlor,"—where she followed in a few oments. Nat bowed and said:
"I desire to see Mrs. Mecks, mada "Very well," said she; "I am Mrs. Meeks."
"Pardon, me, madam," said Nat, with a doubting shake of the head; but this is a matter of some importance—the payment of money—and you are not the lady Mr. Meeks ntroduced me to last winter."

"Not the lady? what!" shrieked she; "Do you mean to tell me that-" you mean to tell me that "I simply tell you, madam," replied Nat, with ley imperturbability, "that Mr. Meeks last winter, in Broadway, near Leonard street, introduced me to a lady whom he called Mrs. Mecks, and you are not the lady."
"Indeed!" exclaimed Mrs. Meeks, her eyes flashing fire; "how old was she?" "Well, about twenty-five."

"Twenty-five! And how was she dress "She wore her hair in ringlets, had dia mond ear-rings— "Diamond car-rings!" A heavy silk velvet dress, very large gold bracelets, a magnificent watch and

"Well, go on," she said spitefully "Silk velvet hat trimmed with magnificen lace, and a muff and boa." "Boa," wrenched out the now thoroughly irate dame; "you'd better bore your way out of this house mighty quick, or else some-body will have a headache! No, sir, I am not Mrs. Meeks, and I want you to leave." "Oh, certainly," said Nat, who saw the tallest kind of a squall brewing, and who had good reason to fear that the sturdy dame might inch at his head a conk-shell or some other of the heavy ornaments which adorned the mantle. Nat therefore, beat a retreat from off the premises, and placed himself behind a stone fence, from which he could command a view of the Brooklyn turnpike. He did not wait long before he saw the amiable Caleb diving described and the premises of preventing by more stringent enactments any wait long before he saw the amiable Caleb diving described and the premises of the secretary of War has just decided that wait long before he saw the amiable Caleb driving down the road all unconscious of the ambush of Nat. The expression upon Caleb's face was one of great amiability, and exemplified that he was at peace with "all the world and the rest of mankind."

In a brief space of time Caleb's steed was world and the rest of mankind.

In a brief space of time Caleb's steed was given into the charge of a stable boy, and unconscious and happy, he entered his domicil and shut the door.

The moment he enfered an attentive car might have detected the sounds of a voice in no way mellow or expressive of endearment; and an instant after Calcb hurriedly came through the door, with amazement on his front and a mop in his rear, the wrong end of which was under the direct and personal superintendence of a lady who was very red in the face and very sturdy in the arms, and who strongly re-sembled Mrs. Meeks. The battle had commenced in the passage way. Caleb's castor, which shone in the rays of the setting sun as he drove down the road, was now very much bruised and out of shape, indeed it was driven far down over Caleb's amiable physiognomy.

"What in thunder's out?" yelled Caleb.
"Twenty-five years old!" shrieked the infuriate dame, and bang Caleb caught the mop over his shoulders. "Corkscrew ringlets!" and punk he got it in the back, with all the strength which nature and anger had given the enraged lady.
"Confound it, don't do that." But it was no use, he had to take it

"Diamond ear-rings!" punk! "Silk vel-ert dress!" bang! "Gold bracelets!" slump. "Murder!" roared Caleb. "Watch and chain!" she shricked, and biff! he took it over the head.
"Muff!" bang! slump! "Boa!" bang!
bang! and down went Caleb with a yell of Now fell the blows thick and fast upon the bruised head, back and face of the prostrate joker; while the lady again rehearsed the catalogue of the wearing apparel and jewels of the other Mrs. Meeks, timing the utterance of the name of each article with a blow upon her prostrate, writhing and bleeding But all things must have an end. The vi

ARRIVAL OF EXCHANGED PRISONERS AT BALTIMORE, Nov. 26.—The Annapolis correspondent of the American, writing on Friday evening, says: Two of the first vessels composing Col. Mulford's fleet of transports

In taking charge of this column, it is but proper to state the objects in view and the course we intend to pursue. The main objects are: First, to enable teachers and other friends of education to exchange their views on teaching and other educational topics; second, to endeavor to awaken a deeper incomposing Col. Mulford's fleet of transports arrived here to-day with paroled men from Savannah. The steamers were the Atlantic, Capt. Gray, and Biackstone, Capt. Barry; the former having on board 649 living skeletons and eight dead bodies. Nine others were buried on the passage. Such was the wretched state of these poor men, that our surgeons were themselves appalled at the avenus single man of the whole terest among the masses of the people in this County in our Common Schools, by the discussing of various subjects relative to school affairs, which we hope will be both interesting and instructive.

Nothing will be permitted to appear in this column of a political, personal or sectarian nature, nor anything calculated to create a division among the friends of education in the County. We will gladly publish anything which we think calculated to forward the good cause. We would also suggest to the contributors to this column the great advantage to be derived from compressing their ideas into a small compass. Give us short, spicy articles, and we guarantee they will be read with avidity by all. When a subject comes up that necessarily requires considerable space, make suitable divisions of it, and continue the subject in another issue.

Friends of Education, there is a wide field open before you in which to labor. Now that there is an opportunity for you to disseminate your views, will you accept it? That it advances civilization is a truism, for where education is not, there exists ignorance and by treading upon a match, which ignited and set her clothes on fire. darkness. But is this general idea, the advancement of civilization, the great object for which we bend all our energies to acquire? If so, what follows? Is not the use-fulness of man, the adaptation of appliances to man's purposes, thereby extending that usefulness, an object which influences us?

As we enjoy the fruits of labor and toil which others endured, so in time, will others reap the benefits arising from our acts and exertions. How can we best render unto the world an equivalent for what we enjoy, and leave as a legacy to our successors a memento worthy of our advantages. The responsibility of man in this great work de-mands effort. Education is the medicine by which a lasting impression can be made, and one that will accomplish the end proposed. Educated, we act as rational, immortal be ings, and achieve the destiny for which we were created. Uneducated, we defeat that that giver graced the Central rark on a pheasant day. "It is more blessed to give than receive" is a divine truth which cannot be controverted, and happiness is the certain effect resulting from usefulness An object which should ever be prominent in our actions, is, to seek to know how we may be useful. He who lives only for himself, who knows not the blessedness to which we referred, who is satisfied to be what he is, and cares not to develop the resources within himself, to extend his influence and benefit others, is not he who enjoys that genuine happiness which springs from disinterested love for his neighbor; and obedience to the prin-ciples which the Holy Word instills. In order then to attain that usefulness which insures happiness, education is necessary, and vital. It strengthens the reasoning powers, develops the intellect, and supplies that knowledge, love of truth, and spirit of inquiry which reaches far into the past, and extends beyond, into the future. Mind is power to be advantageous must be unyou haven't been down our way," was the insinuating rejoinder.

SOMETRING ABOUT SCHOOLS. We know a man who last summer, hired four colts pastured on a farm some five miles distant. At least once in two weeks he got into a wagon, and drove over to see how his juvenile horses fared. He made minute inquiries of the keeper as to their health, their daily watering, etc.; he himself examined the condition of the pasture, and when the dry season came on he made special arrangements to have a daily allowance of meal, and he was careful to know that this was regularly sup-on the upraised mop; he heard in a vigorous tone; he heard a hurtling, whizzing sound in the air, and the next instant Caleb's node was as flat as the other parts of Caleb's face. His two tormentors retreated into the manison, and left him alone with his gore. Slowly, and with the most keen sensations of pain, he raised himself in a sitting posture, and, with many a groan of agony, proceeded to inspect his personal condition.

"I'm blessed if this arm ain't broken! Oh! And, good gracious, what a nose! That wonsum must be dislocated! Oh! Oh! And, good gracious, what a nose! That wonsum must be crazy! I shan't be added to be good, there will be more kissing than culting posture. When his left shoulder must be dislocated! Oh! Oh! And, good gracious, what a nose! That woman must be crazy! I shan't be added to be staring them in the face. The color of the day.

Now, Nat, with the niost pleasurable emotions, had, through the cravice of the fence, observed the whole of the little family jar which I have so feebly described; and he now stood looking over the fence, at the back of his dear friend.

"I's say, Unclo Cale?" shouted Nat.

"Hey!" said Caleb, as he turned, in some little astonishment, a look upon his former victim.
