The Wirze trial was one of considerable prolivity, ---Its opening revelations were received with a theil of horror through the land. But as dry by day, we be-came familiarized with the sppaling story, custom duiled a little the edge of popular indignation. The trial was very fair and patient. The importance antici-cipated at the outset for the case proved not to have been over estimated when the composition of the Court was known. It was not composed entirely of officers ow well known and famous as it might have been over estimated when the composition of the Court was known. It was not composed entirely of officers ow well known and famous as it might have been, and as we wish it had been. The Naval Court-martial now in session at Washington leads: off with Vice Admiral 'Arrargut, and so proceeds through the lists of the Rear Admirals, and to lower grades, although the the trimes it has to try are a schoolboy", jokes com-pared with those committed by Wirze. Nevertheless, the latters Court was unagally well constituted for a military tribunal. The Commission was, with a faw exceptions, composed of officers at least better known to the whole country than (hose engaged in trying the Presidential assassins. The reason of this unaual caro in the detail was partially explained when the first charges and specifications came to be published. It was found that a complexely as Albert E. Lee, Sed-don, the Winders, Northrop, and others less widely fa-mous, were joined in the allegations. With regard to the falsity or truth of these averments, or to the exist-ence, character, or extent of the supposed conspiracy, it is unnecessary to speak at present, since, while, it was a matter of fact, to be investigated by the Commission, nevertheless, for some sufficient reason, it was deemed expedient not to attempt to maintain that form of in-dictment. In the conduct of the trial, the patience of the Court is unnccessary to speak at present since, while, it was a matter of fact, to be investigated by the Commission, nevertheless, for some sufficient/reason, it was deemed expedient not to attempt to maintain that form of in-dictment.

In the conduct of the trial, the patience of the Court was often tried by the fitvolons objections of the Gourt from substantial justice by legal flaws. Wirze's first coursel, and their disposition to screen Wirze's from substantial justice by legal flaws. Wirze's first coursel was Mr. Hughes, who had a sachel full of quiddets and quillets. Onfinding that he was before a military commission, and that his sharp quirks were uncleas, he summarily withdrew from the case. Mr. Baker remained, and at once commended to dispute with the Court. At the cross-examination, of Kellogg on the 26th of August, he indulged in sight a proposterous way of questioning, (which to use his lown language, was 'a little out of the way.'') that the Judge Advocate had to interfere again and fagin. A first days liter, he broke out in a petulant tone with : 'I do wish the Court would not interfere with the witness while I am examining him. I have difficulty enough to make out my case against this kind of testimony without being subjected to these interruptions of the Court.'' No censure was passed by the Court, and accordingly, somebody was burt, not killed, and therefore somebody must be hung.'' General Thomas replied. greatest rage, and pronounced the feeding of a prisoner with such food as an outrage upon him, and discussed its agreat nation." At length, however, in spite of all this wranging, the work of the Court came to a close. If was its easion full forty days. The recorded testimony filled 5000 pages, and included the words, of over. 150 witnesses, and the objections and rulings on twice that number of legal points. The argument of the Judge Advocate occupied five, or six hours in its delivery. Mr. Baker, the defendant's coursel, finisted on having two weeks in which to prepare his closing argument. The Cours allowed him eight days, and afterward two weeks in which to prepare his closing argument. The Cours allowed him eight days, and afterward two weeks in the about the case without argument. But in truth, there was so reasonable defence to be made. The facts themselves could not be overthrown. The very attempt, to explain them away, brought out, their bratal details more completionally. The New York News suggested the probable ground of defence in say-ing: "Unless his treatment of the prisoners under his charge can be about to have been such as to have drawn down the repudiation of his own government, he cannot be held bound for it individually, in view of the lone scuuse of orders, no excuse of special orders--nay, no excuse of orders no excuse of special orders--nay, no excuse of orders of Wirze.
