tive appearance. Paid $10 for the tickets. Recollect that. Cab cost me $10 more. Bear that in mind. Got to the Academy, and couldu't get in for three quarters of an hour; small boys all around, making sarcastic remarks about my-excuse me-calves. Facedidn't get two laths to prop me 0p; and Bo 0a. Got in finally. Tilly went to one room I tious young man wanted to know why I did. Got her to dress as Queen of the Morn-

Got in, finally. Tilly went to one rocm, I to another. Took off my hat. Fellow charged me half a dollar for locking it up. Took off my coat, another half dollar. Unbuttoned my vest, fifty cents more. Had my boots on, and they cost fifty cents apiece. Didn't take checks because I had no place to put them. Went for Tilly. Woman wanted $4 for taking care of her fixings. Paid it, and moved for ball room. First thing I saw was an innocent old ass, dressed as a Feejee Islander, in a shirt collar and ornamental tattop. Scemed to think he was cutting a swell. But he wasn't.

Then there was another man dressed in flesh-colored tights. Tilly blushed like an August sunset, when she saw him and looked the other way. Didn't do much better, how-B ever, for right before her eyes was a damsel dressed like a ballet-dancer, only with a shorter skirt. She was curvetting around like a turkey on hot sheet iron pavement, and without any apparent regard for the proprieues. Then another female came along dressel as a page, in silk stockings, and another as a Turkish boy, all apparently lost to every sense of modesty. The floor was so covered that we couldn't dance, and Tilly was considerable on the rampage, because I had brought her among such a company, so I took her to the Refreshment S doon, to get supper. Ordered a dozen fried oysters .-Waiter brought the whole of them in one teaspoon. Thought Iwould try stewed .-Wasn't enough to cover the bottom of a saucer. Concluded to lay out on chicken salad. One mouthful apiece.

Got up disgusted. Went to pay the bill.-Young man looked at me rather insolently, as if he had done me a personal favor in letting me come there, and asked me for $10. Took all the money I had to pay it. West back to the ball room, only to see Julius Cæsar, dressed in a white sheet, dancing with a female whose dress was as short at the top as the ballet dancer's had been at the skirt. Tilly blushed again. Then she heard some scandalous remarks that were made by two youths near her, and did more blushing, and said rather savagely she wanted to go home. Went out to my dressing room Man wouldn't let-me have my clothes because I had no checks. So had to go home as an Arab. Called a cab, but recollected that I had no money. Nobody around would lend me any because they didn't know me. Very likely wouldn't have done it if they had. Very late. Cars had all stopped running. Had to walk home through the slush. Tilly waded along in silence. Told me to come in, when we reached the house. Said she wanted to see me particularly. Went in.

Tilly looked draggled, but serious. Said rather sharply, that a young man who would deliberately take a lady to such a place, among bad people, must be heartlessly cor rupt and depraved. Said she didn't want to have anything more to do with me, and that she had loved, not wisely, but too well, or something like that.

Tried to explain, but she wouldn't listen, so'I went away in despair. Consider myself finally laid out and ruined Think of taking board at a private madhouse. Reflect upon my chances in a row with the proprietors of the ball. Have chosen the most valuable portion of valor, and concluded not to fight. Have pretty much desided a to fight. Have pretty much decided on taking to hard drinking, and
