TO PHŒBE.

Mountain spirits gather round me—
Gather, Coz., with cheering song—
Telling such sweet things about thee,
That you love me all day long;
But I erase them from me, Cousin—
All the spirits, white and blue:
Still they gather by the dozen,
Swearing that you love me true.

Water spirits, from out the river,
Join the throng to sing of thee,
While the sunbeams brightly quiver
Over mountain, vale and tree:—
They, too, say you love me, Cousin;
But I—who'm I them all away;
Still they tell me in their buzzing,
That you love me all the day.

Lo! from laurel, spruce and cedar,
Comes a dazzling fairy band
In the wake of lovely Tender—
Queen of mystic fairy land,
Mountain spirits hush their singing;
Water spirits, delighted, gaze;
Setting answer all is flinging
Golden light of fleeting rays.

Close they gather all around me,
Perch'd on leaflet, twig and thorn,
Gazing down with mien of pity
On a lover so forlorn.
Speaks the Queen, with voice so charming,
Soft as tone of distant flute,
While the spirits round us swarming
Listen all with pleasure mute:

"List to me! thou idle rover;
Seek not thou a loving wife!
Phœbe, of the purple clover
Loves thee dearer than her life:
In the parlor, porch and dairy,
All the while she dreams of thee—
Talks to Will, and Ma and Mary
Of the things that "ought to be."

"Queen," quoth I, "of land romantic,
I will answer thus to you:
Spirits of the blue Atlantic
Told me something just as true:
Told me over or three times over
As I tell it you in rhyme,
Phœbe, of the purple clover
Loves me—when she has the time!"

"Sister, h
