AND POTTSVILLE

GENERAL ADVERTISER

I saw him again on the other side, But his silk gown floated upon the tide And no one asked, in that blissful spot, If he belonged to "the Church" or not.

Then down to the river a Quaker strayed, His dress of a silver hue was made; "My coat and hat must all be gray. I cannot go any other way."

But a strong wind carried away his hat, A moment he silently alghed for that, And then as he gazed to the farther shore, The coat slip'd off, and was seen no more.

As he enter'd heaven his suit of gray Went quietly salling—away—away—And none of the angels questioned him About the width of his beaver's brim.

Then he button'd his coat straight up to his chin, And atately, solemnly waded in, And his broad-brimmed hat he pulled down tight Over his forehead, so cold and white.

I will teach you to pierce the Bowels of the Earth, and bring out from the Caverns of Hountains Hetals which will give strength to our hands and subject all Nature to our use and pleasure.--- DR. JOHNSON.

Single Copies Six Cents. However, the memory of poor Miss Billings had vanished, as she herself would have said "like night before the dawn," and the sunny, rougish, sparkling little witch of a Nettle had bound heart and soul to her chariot of triumph, and seemed utterly unconscious or indifferent to the torture she was indicting.

"She'll drive me to desperation yet, Fannie. I can't say what will be the result if NO SECTS IN HEAVEN. Talking of sects till late one eve.

That night I stood in a troubled dream.

By the side of a darkly flowing at ream. And a "Churchman" down to the river came, When I heard a strange volce call his name, "Good father, stop: when you cross this tide, You must leave your robes on the other aide." But the aged father did not mind, And his long gown floated out behind, As down the stream his way he took, His pale hands clasping a glit-edged book nle. I can't say what will be the result if that red whiskered fellow hangs around her "I'm bound for heaven and when I'm there, I shall want my book of common prayer: And though I put on a starry crown, I should feel quite lost without my gown." "Then why don't you retaliate, you foolish fellow? Go flirt with Duro Dudley, or some other girl, and make believe you don't Then he fixed his eyes on the shining track, But his gown was heavy and held him back, And the poor old father tried in vain, A single step in the flood to gain.

Next came Dr. Watts with a bundle of psalms, Tied nicely up in his aged arms, And hymns as many a very nice thing, That the people in heaven all round might sing. But I thought that he heaved an auxious sigh, As he saw that the river ran broad and high, And look'd rather surprised as one by one, The psalms and hymns in the wave went down. science she had.

The next morning at breakfast Bob was invisible, and Nettie, as mistress of the house, sent Lucy, auntic's little English maid, to call him. Lucy returned, looking quite alarmed.

"Please, miss, I knocked as 'ard as I could, and Mr. Robert didn't answer; he only groaned." And after him, with his MSS, Came Wesley, the pattern of godliness, But he cried, "Dear me, what shall I do? The water has soaked them through and through." groaned."

Then straightway plunging with all his might, Away to the left, his friend to the right, Apart they went from this world of sin But at last together they entered in. And now when the river was rolling on, A Prosbyterian Church went down: Of women there seem'd a wondrous throng. But the men I could count as they pass'd along. And a sound of murmuring, long and lond, Came ever up from the moving crowd, "You're in the old way, and I'm in the new, Taus is the false, and that is the true."

A voice arose from the breihren then,
"Let no one speak but the holy men,"
For have ye not heard the words of Paul,
"Oh, let the woman keep silence all." I watch'd them long in my curious dream, Till they stood by the borders of the stream, Then, just as I thought, the two ways met, But all the brethren were talking yet, And would talk on; to the heavy tide, Carried them on side by side. Side by side, for the way was one, The tollsome journey of life was done, And Priest and Quaker, all who died, Came out alike on the other side.

that some one ease way is decidedly prefer able, is a metaphysical problem which it would require wiser heads than mine to solve. Such people always remund me of a certain river, which took an odd, unreasonable sort of bend, and which a benign government, deemed it best to straighten. A smooth and commodious channel was prepared forthwith, and every means taken to induce this unruly stream to proceed in the way of the right-eous. All in vain; the disloyal waters refused any such accommodations, and persisted in fretting and fosming along in their own rough way beneath the cliffs, where a rebellious little city sat defaulty perched, tormen ting their unhappy waves with the shot and shell of a terrible cooffict.

Auntie had talked of nothing but this for weeks; uncle gave a grand supper in honor of the successful graduate; half of the girls were desperately in love before he had been home three days; and Nettle—willful Nettle, for whom alone he had eyes or ear—was in the depths of a flirtation with that detestable Tom Ellis, whose great red whiskers might serve as torches for Charon himself.

"Say it again, Nettle!" said Robert, utterly unconscious of my wrath. Say just once more that you don't like Tom Ellis and that you do like me, just—a little."

"Better than any one in the world you said before, you know, Nett," I added wickedly. Poor Nettle! She was completely cornered. All her independence and sauciness were gone, and she stood convicted by her own confession, which Robert, wicked wretch, had heard distinctly through his study-door, when we thought he was up in his bed room, killed, wounded or poisoned. Poor little Nett! She bore her defeat like a veteran, and did just the only thing she could do—plead guilty. She put both her hands in Bob's and told him she did like him just a little; and the unconscionable fellow made her say "better than any one else," and the poor

"Of course I like him," was her demure reply. "I have a great cousinly regard for him; and as he has been very kind to me, why shouldn't I like him?"
"Then why do you treat him so badly? Why do you flirt with that odlous red whis kered Ellis, when you see that it makes Bob so furious that he told me this avening he kered Ellis, when you see that it makes Bob so furious that he told me this evening he could scarcely refrain from kicking him out?" "Which would have been a very gentle-manly way of treating his father's guest, I sm sure." said Nettle, ironically. 'I can't," said Robert ruefully—'I haven't the heart. I'll call that Ellis out yet. Look at them now," he continued, with a despairing giance at Nettie; "she's going to sing for him his favorite air, 'Love's Chidings,' contound him!' I asked her to sing my song that other evening—I meant that sweet little air she used to sing so divinely last summer, and will you believe it, Fan. she sat down to the plano and commenced 'Bobbin' Round,' and of course all the girls commenced to titter."

Of course I believed it, for Nettie was dreadful enough for anything; and when her uncle and aunt went to town for a few days, leaving her mistress of the house, she became, if possible more tormenting than ever. But the crisis came at last. One evening when Nettie was entertaining several of her friends—Mr. Ellis among the number—in her own bright way, acting towards Bob with the most faultiess politeness, a messenger called him to the door, and we saw him no more that evening. Subsequently I heard the poor fellow walking up stairs in his study, and felt that he was struggling with the "green-eyed monster" that hassuch complete possession of him. I looked reproachfully at Nettle. She appeared serenely unconscious, and I wondered mentally what sort of a conscience she had.

The next morning at breakfast Bob was for the days previous to that date: A report as near as could be made was handed in with that of the morning school.

The whole number in attendance during he present month is one hundred; the daily average attendance sixty-two. The cause of this small average is the constant change which has been thus far, and must necessariy be at this season of the year going on in the schools. Many of our pupils attend very regularly, seldom being absent a day, but the larger number are unable to attend so con-stantly, while many that were in attendance during the early part of Spring-were obliged to leave school as soon as the weather became sufficiently-settled to enable them to give their attention to out-door employment. Every week and almost every day new faces present themselves within the school room.—

These pupils are commonly the children of parents who have recently moved to the place or its vicinity, and in some cases are girls that are spared a portion of the day from the families in which they are employed. It will only add a line perhaps to my letter if I give the name of one of the interesting purious last night. I heard him walking his study like a madman."

"Upon my word, Fannie Fairte," Nettle replied, "I gave you credit for more sense. There are some people in this world with whom the art of contradiction really assumes the dignity of a science; it is so perfectly understood and so constantly carried out that I can only imagine it to be the result of deep thought and reflection. A little obstinacy now, once in a while, is only a sort of commendable self-respect; but why people will insist upon having their own way about a thing for no other purpose than because it is their own way, when it is a self-evident fact that some one else's way is decidedly preferable.
