GRANDFATHER'S DARLING.

Grandfather is past ninety and little May but four : Yet they love to sit together beside the cottage door; And as the old man dances his darling on his knee. He teils her of the far back time when he was young as she.

Those long and rambling stories May of before has heard, But she listens with wide-open ears to every well-known word : And in her mind she wanders if he remembers too. The men who lived in Noah's ark, when the old world was new. Grandfather's hair is scanty, and white as driven snow.

While May's rich curls are golden, kissed by sun's warm glow;

But as the young head nestles fondly against the old, You see the sunlight blending the silver and the gold. Grandfather is not book learned, but from his early youth. He has striven to walk Heavenward, and loved the way of truth ; And now he clasps his dailing as the day is getting dim, And both together murmer a simple evening hymn:

His stalwart sons come round him-all well advanced in years---

And tell hin how the world goes on, with all its hopes and fears :

But from their modern gossip he turns away to hears.

The childish prattle litte May is whispering in his car. Folka call the old man childish-it may be even so-His heart is line a little child's, and this we love to hnow :

And somewhere it is written that not the wise nione. But those who live in child-like faith.our Fath-or calls His own. Grandfather is past ninety, and little may but four. So they will not sit together long before that cottage door ; But we know when the old man from earth is called away,

His God and bers, will still protect his darling little May.

his wife seriously. "Oh, never mind-spare me the calculation ! It sounds to much like business, and I get enough of that during the day." 'But you do not object to my plan?' 'Not in the least. I have no doubt it is highly commendable; but then you know

Carrie, I never was gifted with much pruacnee.' 'I am aware of that,' said his wife smiling. This ended the conversation for a time. The plan insugarated by the young wife was steadily carried out. She was not one of those, of whom there are so many, who enter upon a new plun zealously, but soon tire of it. In the present case she was thoroughly satisfied of the wisdom of her purpose and resolved to carry it through.

Every morning she called upon her husband for a dime, which was forthwith added to the accamulation. Frequently he had not the exact change but would toss her twenty-five cents instead. She would assure him laughingly, that this would answer her purpose equally as well. More than once Charles would banter her on the subject of her savings bank, but these she bore gaily. But these were not the only accessions the fund received. Her husband had early arranged to make ample allowance for dress-I say ample, though I dare say some of my readers might not consider it so; but Caroline-who was in the habit of making up her own dresses-provided herself with a good wardrobe at a much less expense than some not as well in the science of managing, could have dano: After considerable calculation she came to the conclusion, that out of her daily allowance she could be able to make a daily deposit equal to that she expected from her husband. Of this however she thought it best on the whole, not to inform Charles, enjoying in anticipation, the prospect of being able, at some future time, to suprise him with the unexpected amount of her savings."

At the close of every month the tin box was emptied, and the contents transferred there is no hope of better times until to a savings back of more pretensions, where nterest would allowed. When the sum do-been looking out for something of this 'I think we shall be able to do so. Both of us are well supplied with clothing and Then we can live more plainly-have less pies and cakes, and I have no doubt it will be an improvement so far as our health is concerned.' "What a calculator you are, Carrie," said her husband feeling considerably easier in mind. "I really think after all you have said, that it won't be so hard to live on half of our usual income-for the present at least. 'But,' and his countenance again changed, suppose my work should entirely fait-I suppose that you couldn't reduce our expenses to nothing at all could you?"

'That certainly surpasses my powers, said his wife, smiling, 'but even in that case there is no ground for discouragement. You have not forgotton our savings bank, have you,'

'Why no, I didn't think of that,' said her husband. 'I suppose that would keep off has sold her soul for grain, they dye of starvation for a few weeks.' His wife smiled.

'And in those weeks,' she added, 'business might revive."

'To be sure,' added her husband. 'Well I guess it'll be all right-I'll not trouble myself about it.'

The apprehension to which Charles Lynford had given expression proved to be only too well founded. In less than a month from the date of the conversation just recorded, the limited supply of work which he had been able to secure entirely failed, and he found himself without work of anykind-thrown upon his own resources.

Although he had anticipated this, it seemed unexpeted when it actually came upon him, and he again returned home in a fit of disappointment. He briefly explained to his wife the new calamity which had coume upon him. 'And the worst of it is,
