If at any time the person in whose name the majority of the electors was chosen should die in the interval between the voting day and the day fixed for the meeting of the electors, it'is easy to see that by the arts of professional politicians acting upon a small body of men, a notoriously unfit person might be foisted upon the nation as its Chief Magistrate. The only obvious and certain way to avoid the risks which would attend such a contingency would be to vote directly for President and Vice-President, and thus put the succession, in case of the death of the former before inauguration, beyond all question.
