

A YOUNG WIFE'S DESPAIR.
Committing Suicide in a Fashionable New York Hotel Six Months after Marriage—A Husband's Passion for Strong Drink.

Mr. Robert Stuart and Miss Eveline T. Marks were married in St. Thomas's Church on the 19th of April last. The ceremony filled the house with wealthy and fashionable relatives and friends. The bride was the adopted daughter of Mr. Abel B. Marks, a retired merchant, who dwells at 63 West Thirty-fourth street. Her mother was Mrs. Marks's sister, and the name that she had exchanged for that of Mr. Marks was Terry. The groom's father was Lieut. Robert Stuart of the United States navy, who died in 1852. His widow became the wife of the Hon. Elijah Ward. The groom inherited from his mother's friends a large fortune. Before his marriage he lived with his mother and step-father in the Fifth Avenue Hotel. After the marriage the couple took a parlor and bedroom in the second story of the Berkeley House, 210 Fifth Avenue. For three or four months the couple lived happily. Then the husband began to drink. Two months ago his taste for liquor developed rapidly, and he often reached home so much intoxicated that he was barely able to walk straight. His friends noticed his growing folly, and it was proposed to send him to Europe, in order that he might change his companionship and be under the influence of his mother and step-father, who are in Europe. It is said that President Frederick D. Tappan of the Gallatin National Bank, who was in New York during the absence of his step-father, proposed to accompany him.

THE PEOPLE WHO DRINK.
The Result of Observations made by a New York Reporter—Men Who Frequent the "First-Class" Bars.

A New York Sun reporter has been making a professional tour of the bars and saloons of the city, and gives the result of his observations in the following account:

Physicians say that nearly two-thirds of their male patients suffer in one way or another from alcoholic poisons. No close observer will be disposed to doubt this.

From the low shops on South and West streets, along the line of more fashionable saloons on and near Broadway, in the vicinity of the old post-office, in the gilded retreats that grild the Astor House, in the several places of note on Printing House square, in the cosy bowlers of Union square, and in the magnificent marble palace that fringe Madison square, not omitting the frescoed club room and the snug slop shops of the extreme east-side—from the first to the last, and in them all, the same story of intemperance may be learned.

The Diseases of Great Men.
Some of the most illustrious men and women have been the victims of ailments of the nervous system. In almost every treatise on epilepsy, Cesar, Marchionet, Petrarch, Napoleon and Byron are mentioned as having been subject to this disease. Henry IV., of England, after some time of ill-health, became subject to epileptic fits, which would cause him to fall down apparently dead. These were undoubtedly epileptic in character. On the 20th of March, 1413, while he was at church, he was seized with a fit and soon expired, being at the time forty-seven years old. Charles II., of England, the most famous of his age, was afflicted with the disease, and died after a few days' illness, in the fifty-fifth year of his life. Among the apoplexies we have such notable characters as Dickens, Thackeray and Napoleon. Frederick the Great, who was the victim of melancholia, and Queen Francisca, of Portugal, George III., of England, Tasso, Pascal, William Collier, Cowper, Charles XII., and Dr. Johnson were subject to attacks of insanity. Of the three disputed discoverers of modern anatomy, William Harvey, John Morton from a stroke of apoplexy, while Jackson is hopelessly insane. Dr. Adam Clarke died of cholera; Oliver Cromwell of ague; Robert Duke of starvation; Sir Humphrey Davy, as a result of injuries to an elbow; Alexander the Great of dysentery; Augustus II., of Silesia, died of an old wound; Camillus of a plague; Chaucer of old age; Queen Mary of small-pox; John Racine of abscess of the liver; Napoleon III. died of embolism; Prince William, of England, and Shelley were both drowned; Thomas Chatterton and the wife of Shelley committed suicide; Lord Byron fell a victim of remittent fever; John Keats, Edward III. and Lancelotti were destroyed by phthisis pulmonalis; John Locke was a sufferer with asthma; Burns shortened his days by his excesses; Scott and Coleridge died of cholera; Jeremy Taylor died of some fever; John Bunyan died in 1688, in London, it is said, in consequence of a cold caught in a journey undertaken by him in inclement weather, with the object of reconciling a father and son; Thomas Gray, perhaps cholera. His death has been frequently cited as a striking instance of the miseries of a literary career. It is related that, when almost starving, the poet receiving a guinea from a friend, on which he rushed off to a baker's shop, bought a roll, and was choked while merrily devouring the first mouthful. Louisa, daughter of George III., when Queen of Denmark, died in an operation for hernia, at the early age of twenty-six. Queen Caroline, her mother, also died of hernia, after an operation by the celebrated Ronby and Croze vessels being in four parts of water, the anchor was let go, pursuant to the order of the master, Hughes, who had gone forward to give it. As the anchor was let slip, a two and one-half inch line by which a buoy was attached to the vessel, and which had fallen off and to the vessel being in four parts of water, the anchor was let go, pursuant to the order of the master, Hughes, who had gone forward to give it. On Saturday last a woman went to George Inness's pharmacy and purchased half an ounce of laudanum. She said it was for Mrs. Stuart. There was some thing in the bottom of the four-ounce phial, which Mr. Watling, the clerk, supposed to be old laudanum. The woman was tall and not well dressed. Mr. Watling supposed her to be a servant. On Sunday Mrs. Stuart called Kate Cummings, a chambermaid, into her room. She seemed worried, and was weeping. She said that she would rather die than live as she was living. Then she explained that on Saturday night her husband spoke harshly to her. She told the chambermaid that she was going out, and would return soon. Mr. Stuart arrived, he was to be told that she would return in a few minutes. She then went out, but was gone more than ten minutes. When she returned, she sat down at her desk and wrote a letter, which she sealed and addressed to her husband. While she was writing, the chambermaid went out of the room. She was not again seen by anybody except her husband until about two hours previous to her death.

There were four bar-tenders, all busily engaged. In that brief time they sold to all sorts and conditions of men two hundred beers, three-two whiskeys, ten lemonades, two plain whiskeys and three gin cocktails. It was an exceptionally busy half hour, to be sure; but as I took my seat at a little table near the counter, I noticed in the next half hour, and made a memorandum to guard against mistakes, a sale of one hundred and thirty beers, fifty whiskeys and six gin cocktails. The men who drank were not "bums," very many of them are known to the world of politics, several are noted writers, the City Hall furnishes its quota, some do business in the swamp, and not one seemed in the least degree affected by what he drank.

A Sensitive Woman.
The following is told of a resident of Iowa: "The case of Miss M., who resides in Shell Rock, is a remarkable one. The slightest odor of tobacco, ether, chloroform, turpentine, benzine, kerosene, or prussic acid will, if she inhales it, throw her into violent convulsions. So sensitive is she to the effect that she is obliged to sleep wholly in a room by herself. These convulsions increase in severity at each repetition, and a few days since, a man entered the house with a piece of tobacco in his mouth before the family were aware of it, and although the rooms were thoroughly ventilated, the odor of tobacco remained to produce these convulsions when Mrs. Winship came into the room, and for some hours it was thought she would not recover. Extraordinary precautions are used to prevent those who use tobacco from going to the house.

An Armenian Family at Tea-Time.
Captain Burnaby, in his book, "Travels in Asia Minor," gives the following peculiar picture of life in Armenia: The wife of the Armenian and her children were not at all coy about showing their faces—at least so much of them as the dirt did not hide from our view. They squatted round my English servant, who was making tea, and watched his proceedings with great interest. Now, the woman, sticking her filthy fingers into the basin, took out a lump of sugar; then turned to each of her children, her children's mouths, she had a suck herself. "Give it to me!" suddenly exclaimed her husband. The lady did not show any readiness to surrender the prize. The man sprang to his feet; thrusting a finger and thumb in the mouth of his helpless wife, at the same time clasping her tightly around the throat with the other hand so as to prevent being bitten, he extracted the delicacy. Holding the sweet morsel high in the air, he displayed the treasure to the assembled guests; then, greatly to the woman's indignation, he placed it within his own jaw.

Foresting Disease.
When we speak of death it often the penalty paid for a fatal disease, should we not be warned against the folly of neglecting disease when we can do so for our own sake? Assuredly we should, and upon the first manifestation of ill health or decay of physical vigor, seek the aid of medicine. The Hottel's Stomach Bitters entitle that medicine of many virtues to the highest consideration as a preventive of disease. It is strongly recommended as a means of arresting the progress of malarious fevers, dyspepsia, constipation, liver complaint, kidney and other troubles, colds, influenza and other disorders which in their incipency are far more easily overcome than in their maturity. It is the great destroyer of malarious diseases, and it is the only one which has demonstrated its power to vanquish them in their worst phases.

Water for the Eyes.
A writer in Fraser's Magazine thinks that whatever hesitation there may be justly called for in recommending one or another of the lotions now so popular, there need be no such doubt in respect to cold water or pure water. He says in cases of much inflammation or difficulty of opening the eyelids in the morning, experience by so many, that warm water should be warm, and it may be mixed with warm milk, but in nearly all other cases it should be cold. All those who have been engaged in reading or writing during several hours at a stretch, and especially at night, should carefully close the eyes with cold water before going to bed and the first thing in the morning's ablutions. All artists, too, who work at a blazing fire, ought often to wash their eyes with cold pure water, and so should all those who work in wool, particularly carders and spinners, and all those who are employed in woolen and cotton manufactures, the fine dust which such works disperse producing cataracts, obstate inflammation, swollen eyes, etc.
