The Outlook for 1880.

[Phila, Weekly Press.] The unpromising outlook for the Democratic party in the coming elections in New York and Ohio, and the not unreasonable conclusion that their vote this year forecasts their verdict next year, have led the Louisville Courier-Journal to conclude that the Republican party has at length succeeded in confronting a solid South with a solid North. Other Democratic journals, however, are not so easily discouraged, and endeavor to figure up enough electoral votes for their candidates without the aid of the two States on which their hopes have hitherto been centered.

The 138 votes from the sixteen to make up the necessary 185 constiassistance of New York's 35 or Ohio's 22, the Democracy cannot overcome.

The Northern States heretofore claimed with the greatest confidence by the Democrats as certain to cast their electoral vote for the Democratic candidates next year, are Indiana, New Jersey, Connecticut, California and Oregon. Indiana, always a doubtful State, has for the last ten years been pretty consistently Democratic. Though it gave Grant a majority in 1872 of 5,084, the gubernatorial election of the month preceding was a better test of the relative strength of parties, when Hendrick was elected over the Republican candidate by a majority of 1.184.

In the same way New Jersey is not unreasonably relied on to give its vote with Indiana and the solid South. In 1860 New Jersey alone of all the Northern States failed to give its entire electoral vote to Lincoln and Han.lin; in 1864 it contributed with Kentucky and Delaware the 21 votes received by McClellan and Pendleton, and in 1868 it joined New York and support Mr. Greeley in 1872, the State vote in the year before and at every election since shows a substautial Democratic majority. Adding then the 15 votes of Indiana and the 9 votes of New Jersey to the 138 from the South, but 23 yet remain to be provided. Connecticut, California and Oregon can together furnish but 15 of this number, even if they do not prefer to east their vote for the Republican candidates. Connecticut, with but one exception, that of 1876, has given a majority for every Republican presidential candidate, including Fremont. In off years it has, it is true, a tendency to occasionally elect a Demoeratic Governor, but in 1878, with both a National and a Prohibition ticket in the field, the Republicans elected their candidate, and it is by no means evident that in the coming national Miller. struggle of 1880 Connecticut will not resume her old place in the Republican column.

California is relied on by the Democrats, though it is hard to tell why. Should the Workingmen keep up their organization, and have a presidential candidate of their own, as is Kearney's programme, the State is the contest be between the two regular parties there is no reason why the Guilfoyle, James Overturf.

Wisconsin, in spite of its | FLECTION PROCLAMATION. uniform Republican record, is classed as doubtful, with several other Republican Stotes where a large Greenback vote has developed itself, on the theory that the opposition to the Republicans that Democratic. But if there are only two parties in the field next year, the Greenback party will distribute itself according to its natural affinities, and the Democrats will hardly succeed in electing their candidates by Republican votes.

Thus it is apparent that the forebodings of the Louisville Conrier-Journal are correct, and that, losing New York and Ohio, the Democrats cannot possibly elect the next president. A slightly increased Republican vote in several of the larger Northern States will wrest from the Democrats the control of the House. The election of Republican Legislatures in Connecticut, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio and Indiana would displace six Democratic Senators on March 4, 1881. With the loss of Mr. Bruce of Mississippi, but with no defection in Northern Republican States, the Senate would then be a tie with a Republican vice president over it. The prospect of redeeming all the six States named is perhaps not flattering. Yet, though the Senate may continue two years longer with a small Democratic majority, we have every reason to anticipate for 1881 a Republican administration and a Republican House.
