Washington Letter. (From our regular correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., OCT. 27, 1879. The Administration is safe at last, In returning to the White House after so long a sojourn among the people, the President may well appreciate PICTURE FRAMES & JEWELRY that he is snugly ensconced once more where the American citizen cannot compel him to stump speaking and to witness trotting matches at country on him since his return to urge their a yard peculiar claims for place. Our citizens are determined to secure the removal of one of our District Commissioners who has in many ways rendered himself obnoxious to all classes, and as it is taken for granted this official will be decapitated in deference to our wishes, several of our disinterested citizens are, in person and by delegations endeavoring to show Mr. Hays that they are willing to be forced into becoming the successor of the outgoing official. Prominent among the numerous applicants is Sayles J. Bowen. His prominence Mayor by the people, prior to our disfranchisement by Congress, and served as such for several years, when | Shaws from 25 cents to $20.00. the opposition succeeded in ousting him under the cry of "Reform." The promise of reform in our municipal affairs have proved as fallacious as the promises of lessened taxes made by a New York City Board of Aldermen, but they served to secure Mayor Bowen's defeat. Now that he is endeavoring to secure a virtual re-election, the opposition are pouring out upon him all their vials of wrath and villification and if their representations are to be received without allowance, he is indeed a terrible sinner. But we are sceptical to the highest degree.

onism. We hope Mr. Hayes will appoint him. The widow Oliver who sued Senator Cameron for breach of promise has a hard time of it in our courts owing to her inability to meet judicial expenses. Her case seems hopeless unless some would-be benefector must necessarily assist her under the consciousness that, he may, like Mr. Camerou, have eventually to render a second contribution to keep himself out of the courts at her instance. Aparts one will assist her pecuniarily, and There is nothing in his appearance to attract the attention of strangers, though such of those who knew him several years ago when he lived a dashing life with his cigars and horses. He is a man of square compaet build, inclined now to corpulency and goes rather shabbily clad, bardly shabbily either, but with a blue suit of clothes, showing the need of brushing and attention, his head covered with a black slouch hat, rather crumpled and worn down over the eyes; on his feet a low cut pair of shoes the beels wore asiant, between which and his pants is exposed a pair of white (once) half-hose. This comprises the outward makeup of Orville Grant, brother of the General and Ex-President. In face and figure Orville is not unlike his distinguished brother. He is somewhat taller but has the same oval face, wears his whiskers cut short and has the same shaped head. Orville's eyes differ from the General's. They are of deep blue, small, but have a penetrating glance. In many characteristics Or-ville is like the General. He*almost always is alone, is quite reticent; seldom speaking to anyone unless first accosted. He seems to be laboring under the hallucination that he is weighed down with business cares and has many air castles in course of mental construction though he seldom intrudes his visionary schemes upon
