Mr. PENNO,
LET it be remembered, that on the eleventh day of September, seventeen hundred and ninety-four, in the nineteenth year of American independence, the Democratic Society of Pennsylvania (I believe) for the first time approved of the conduct of the President of the United States. Now, Mr. Penno, I am myself a great friend of the President, and always thought that in general his conduct seemed to be marked with the greatest caution and prudence; but, who can now entertain a doubt of the propriety of his conduct when sanctioned by that great luminary of liberty, equality, patriotism, republicanism, democracy, the rights of man, &c. &c. If there ever was such a doubt entertained of the President, let it now be dispelled, as the mist of the morning before the bright beams of the sun.
I was almost doubtful whether the quota of militia of this State would be raised in time to co-operate with those from some of the other States, not considering the Democratic Society, like the oracles of old, were to pronounce and determine the propriety or impropriety of the measure. The long expected decision is at last announced; and the decree is to MARCH!—That this was all the people awaited for, may be easily perceived by the number of volunteers that turn out daily, and the people are becoming fighting mad.—Among them what numbers of the members of that glorious body do we see, as bright examples to their fellow-citizens, running ready to break their necks to procure commissions, that they may lead their fellow-soldiers to the field of battle.—And as they have already convinced the world of their good intentions in regard to the political proceedings in the cabinet—when they shall come into the field of honor, their warlike actions will shine forth with ten-fold splendor.
A CITIZEN.

N.B. It is to be observed, that those gentlemen of the Society who do not incline to go themselves, not only pay the usual fine and find a substitute, but have it in contemplation (this I do not know whether to believe or not) to raise a regiment at their own expence.
FROM THE MONITOR,
Published at Litchfield, (Connecticut.)
THE HOPELESS PATIENT.
On the Death of a LADY who lately died at Medford near Boston, of a Consumption.

THE Taper's waning element of fire
Lights up Reflection's moralizing muse;
And Melancholy's eye, with keen desire,
The fading light and gathering vapour views.
As spends the Wax, so wastes the Lamp of life,
As sinks the Flame, Life elbs to flow no more!

So sullen Boreas wrecks, in sudden strife,
The trembling vessel on the desert shore.
As laves the horn'd when foaming from the chace,
So pants the heart as flares the puffing blast;
And as the yielding hare, with pally'd pace,
So weak and wan life veiges to the last.
As glares the Glow-worm as he wanton flies,
In languid whiffs the Taper dies away;
So life goes out, and lo the Worldling dies,
And rests in slumber till the coming day.
As coylets Infants hover round the blaze,
Lur'd by the slender Taper's dazzling beams;
So Man's decy'd by fortune's gilded rays,
And dies in flutters, wrapt in giddy dreams.

As busy buzzing Bees bespread the flower,
And rob its vital essence while in bloom;
So Death, forever busy, heeds the hour
To spoil and kill, to feed the hungry tomb.
I greet thee, marky Monarch of the shade,
Welcome as rest to Pilgrims sad beguil'd,
Or kindly joy that wakes the bridal maid,
Or friendly moriels to the breadless child.
Thy barbed arrow stills the plaint of woe,
As nuptial rites make glad the guileless heart;
To me you're only cruel when so slow,
Thou great Magician of the Sealing art.
As gushing waters issu'd from the rock,
And still'd the murmurs of the famish'd hoil;
So Death can soft and craggy hearts unlock,
And joy the wretch who bears the lonely coast.
Farewell, blest Steward of my treasur'd soul,
Kinder than tender Shepherd of his flock;
Thy moving passion sways without controul
And binds the heart, as reapers bind the flock.

As the lone Dove laments her callow brood,
Robb'd by the rustic Rifer's ruthless hand;
So mourns my Mate, and deems the Spoiler rude,
Who when the heart is twin'd, untwines the band.
Maria, child of Sympathy, adieu!
I droop as weeping willows pierc'd with cold;
Kind were thy Parents, and as kind were you,
Hither to haste to watch the sickly fold.
That precious Plant which withers at the touch,
Is not more yielding than thy feeling heart;
Thy tears and sober sadness grieve me much,—
Hush thy complaints,—the hour is come to part.
Vain world of thorns and thistles, care and pain,
Of broils and toils, scenes chequer'd with alloy;
Troubled and faithless as the surging main,
—I leave thee for a realm of Peace and Joy.

Foreign Intelligence
ALOST, July 7.
Yesterday Earl Moira with his army, arrived at Alost from Dendermonde, as they entered at one end of the town, the enemy entered at the other. The fire began on both sides. Some of the French cavalry having been mistaken for Hessian horse, colonel Doyle, his lordship's adjutant general, approached to rally them, as they seemed in confusion, in consequence of which he received two wounds, one on the head, and the other in the elbow joint of the left arm. The wound in the head is of a slight nature, the other is more serious. Both wounds were given with a sabre; and the action in which the colonel distinguished himself by much valour, continued with obstinacy and activity on both sides. Mr. Vandeleur of the dragoons, has been slightly wounded in the knee. Adjutant general Graham, of the 15th Light horse, in the skirmish was severely wounded; but though the French had incessantly hung upon Lord Moira's rear and harrassed it with cannonading the whole way, yet they had not much to boast of in the action. Intelligence having reached the camp near Ache, 500 of the light dragoons were ordered immediately to join his lordship. Earl Moira's army, we are sorry to say, was rather in want of ammunition, as the men, for the sake of speed, were not encumbered scarcely with any; what they had did not amount to more than 25 rounds a man, which was carried on the guns.

The French attacked the Prince of Orange at Waterloo, in front of the Forest of Soignes, and after an obstinate resistance succeeded in turning the flank of his army, which they would have completely destroyed, had not twelve or thirteen battalions, chiefly Dutch, come up at the critical moment to the assistance of that wing.—They attacked the victorious part of the French, and by out-flanking them, forced them to retreat in their turn, which enabled the Prince of Orange to retain his position.
Landrecies, Orchies, Marchiennes, &c. are already evacuated, and what else can be expected of Conde, Valenciennes, La Queunoy, &c. not reckoning a hundred subordinate, but not inconsiderable places.

BRUSSELS, July 3.
Richard and Chodien, the Commissioners of the French Convention, have issued a proclamation which has been circulated here; inviting the Belgians to be calm and tranquil, and promising security and protection to all the peaceable inhabitants who shall remain at their homes.
July 4.

As the retreat of the grand combined army on the Sambre, under the command of Prince Cobourg and the Prince of Orange, had been resolved upon and ordered by the Emperor, if certain events should take place, the troops are passing day and night thro' this city for Holland and Lothrain.
The head quarters of the grand army were yesterday at Hal, and are expected to be transmitted hither this evening. The heavy artillery has been sent by water to Mattricht.
A not a single person in the service of government is left here. The nobility, the clergy, and the principal citizens are gone. This city, but lately the residence of a Court, and so brilliant, is now depopulated, and the greater part of the houses abandoned and shut up. The Court is literally empty. Every thing movable has been carried off or sold, even at the palace of Lacken, and nothing remains but the bare walls.

Of the magazines, part was sold, and part distributed gratis among the people. The magazines at Mons were valued at five millions, and belonged chiefly to the Dutch. Part of them was burnt by the Austrians, and the rest fell into the hands of the French.
Seven eighths of the inhabitants of Hainault are gone.
Landrecy, Queunoy and Conde are blockaded by the enemy. Valenciennes alone can make any resistance.
Two battalions of Dutch were taken at Mons; nine squadrons and three battalions besides, are still missing not having appeared at the general rendezvous at Hal yesterday evening.

No description can convey an idea of the confusion that reigns at this moment among the combined troops evacuating the country. With respect to the motives of evacuation, it is easy to see that it is a thing agreed upon between the Austrians and the French. The Dutch exclaim against the Emperor, and the Austrians against the Hanoverians. I shall, however, be able to explain very fully the new line of politics which the Cabinet of Vienna has thought proper to adopt. I consider it as the sole motive for the evacuation of the Netherlands, which the English and the other allies openly reprobate.
General Beauclieu's camp at Ubras has been reinforced by 3000 Prussians, who are not to remain with him, but to march to join the Earl of Moira.

The volunteers of this city are all under arms. Strong patrols parade the streets day and night to maintain order, & will continue to do so till the arrival of the French, which we look for on Monday next.
Several millions in specie, and the archives, which the states of Brabant withheld to secure Holland, were stopped by Austrians and Dutch at Lillo, and escorted to Ruremonde by four squadrons of Dutch cavalry.

DENDERMONDE, July 5.
Earl Moira's army arrived here on Thursday evening, after a fatigued with forced marches. About 250 of the men were drafted off to the hospitals. Yesterday the magazines and the hospitals of the army, commanded by the prince of Saxe Coburg
