Foreign Intelligence.
LONDON, July 12.
Extract of a letter from the Hague, dated July 8.

"There is no doubt the rapidity with which the towns in Flanders are evacuated, together with the mysterious appearance of affairs, looks but ill on the part of the Emperor; Nevertheless, it is the opinion of those who are best informed, that his Imperial majesty has neither deserted the cause, nor come to any underhand agreement with the enemy. As to the reasons for the premeditated evacuation of the fertile and valuable Netherlands, they will not yet appear; and probably it will not be a bad stroke of policy to let those wrangling states, and haughty priests, together with the turbulent and ungrateful inhabitants of Flanders, who would not come forward in their own defence, feel the difference between the government they so voluntarily gave up, and that under which they will be put by the French, whilst the Emperor makes a visit to his loyal Hungarian dominions, where he is beloved, and where he may be supplied with troops and money sufficient to attack and reconquer the Netherlands, and enter them as conqueror. This plan is said to be perfectly visible to those who are AU FAIT in the politics of the day. In the mean time the Netherlands will suffer very severely; the plentiful harvest of the year, the riches of the cities and towns, together with all the men capable of bearing arms, (and who have already been put in a state of requisition, as far as the French have penetrated) will be sent to France, and from thence to oppose the Royalists in la Vendee, a business which the Convention do not like to let their own troops about, and which is of a more serious nature than they care to own.

"Having said so much respecting Flanders, I have to tell you, with regard to Holland there is no doubt but a formidable body of troops will be stationed on the frontiers for its protection, to the number of 60,000 men, which will be fully sufficient for the defence of a country constructed as Holland is; besides which there is again a talk of the Prussians coming forward, as a proof of which it is said that general Melons, who was at Treves, is arrived at Cimney, near Dinant, with his corps of 4000 men, and that general Blankenstein was also expected there.

"Other accounts mention the arrival of 4000 Prussians at Aix, who are slated to be the advanced forces of 60,000 men.
All this looks as if the Prussians were moving.

The present Polish Monarch, if such he may be now called, is the son of Count Poniatowski, who was a colonel of the Swedish guards of King Stanislaus of Poland, and a nobleman of uncommon merit. His attachment to the person of Charles XII. of Sweden was such, that he followed him into Ukrania as a volunteer, without any post in his army. He was a man of invincible courage, and of great calmness and presence of mind in the most imminent dangers. He was the chief instrument in saving and carrying off the Swedish hero from the battle of Pultowa when desperately wounded, for which service he was promoted to the rank of a general. He also preserved the life of that Prince a second time, at the battle of Rugen in Pomerania. He afterwards acted as Ambassador for Charles XII. at Constantinople, which duty he discharged with extraordinary address. His son, the present King of Poland, who inherits all the virtues of his illustrious father, is about five feet seven inches in stature, about 62 years of age, has a majestic aspect, a piercing eye, and possesses great courage tempered with reason; his natural parts, which are strong and quick, are improved by a very liberal education; he is blest with the gift of memory in a very extraordinary manner; he speaks several languages in great perfection, and is a lover of the arts and sciences.

This monarch visited London in the year 1754, remained in England from the beginning of September till the latter end of December. During his stay in this kingdom, he made a tour through South Britain, and examined every thing worthy the attention of an ingenious and curious traveller. He went two or three times to Westminster Abbey, and copied the most remarkable inscriptions on the ancient monuments there; he was also in the golden gallery at the top of St. Paul's Church, where he wrote his name. He liked England, and was fond of the persons in genteel life, with whom he conversed; but considered the lower class in a very unfavourable light, on account of some mobs which he chanced to be a spectator of, and from thence he had too hastily formed his opinion of the behaviour of the whole body of the common people.

In a complimentary letter to this Monarch on his election, said to be written with the late King of Prussia's own hand, there is this remarkable passage; "Your Majesty must reflect, that, as you enjoy a Crown by election, and no more by descent, the world will be more observant of your Majesty's actions than any other potentate in Europe, and it is but reasonable. The latter being the mere effect of consanguinity, no more is looked for (though much more is to be wished) from him than what men are endowed with in common; but from a man exalted by the voice of his equals from a subject to a king, from a voluntarily elected to reign over those by whom he was chosen, every thing is expected that can possibly deserve and adorn a Crown. Gratitude to his people is the first great duty of such a Monarch, for them alone (under Providence) he is indebted that he is one.
A king who is so by birth, if he acts derogatory to his station is a satire only on himself; but an elect one, who behaves inconsistent with his dignity, re-
