HAGUE, Auguft 15 The moft important intelligence of the day is, that the Allied Powers are at length going to recog uze Monfieur, Re-gent of the kingdom of France-to raife the afylum the has hitherto beftowed, to fuch as may refule to ferve. The death of Roberpierre has revived the hopes of the Emigrants. they have not yet finished the catalogue. —After Dumourier's flight, the fame dicty was, and is repeated.

Briffot and his party were, according to Robelpierre and Danton, the vileit and worlt moniters in exiltence. No ooner was this faction crushed, than Hebert, the blafphemer, the atheift was denounced, and fell under the axe for attempting to reject a God from the national creed. No fooner was Hebert gone, than Danton was a villain, an a-theift and a fpeculator. Danton falls and all is quiet. Robefpierre and his party pretended the Convention was thoroughly purged of villains. The calm latted near three months-a most furprising length of time! Then the florm thickens and burlts upon the head of Robefpierre-this immaculate patriot is fuddenly converted into a Defpot -a monfter of wickedness; and he with fifty or a hundred accomplices is tum-bled into the grave. Now the players, Tallien and Collot d'Herbois, have copious subjects for their theatrical eloquence; fuch a catalogue of crimes is detected against Robespierre, as would make even a Revolutionist shudder! Now again the Convention is purified of traitors-perhaps for a month, or two at fartheft ! Whatever then be the flate of the yeomanry, if we believe the Convention, their leaders hitherto have been the worft men that ever difgraced human nature.

The real truth probably, is, that the Convention are all like other men, and very much alike in their views. But they differ in their opinions as to public measures; and not poffelling a spirit of conciliation, each party are determined to take off the other. Then commences a fecret war, and intrigues with the populace of Paris; and that party which is fupported by the populace of that great city always fucceeds. This is the state of the whole bufinefs.

NEW-YORK, October 17.

The prefent governing party in France fay the fame hard things of Robefpierre, as Robefpierre did of Danton and He-bert; as thele did of Briffot and Roland ; and as all those parties did of La Fayette and Dumourier-traitors, confpirarors, villains,-no name is harfh enough to deferibe the fallen men.

We are told by our Jacobins that We are told by our Jacobins that there are very few crimes committed in France at the prefent period—theft and robbery are faid fcarcely to exift in that country—and this is alledged as a proof of the goodnels of morals in the French nation. The truth is the French were parar addited to the arises of the for never addicted to the crimes of theft and robbery. Under the old government a traveller might leave his bag-gage in the bar-room of an inn, without danger of lofing any part of it. But France abounded with crimes of other France abounded with crimes of other kinds. There is however another circumflance that deferves notice. The common idlers and rogues of that nation are moftly em-ployed in the army ; where their morals are kept well difciplined. Befides the ex-ilence of a new and general crime, that of anticivifin, or oppolition to the prefent yovernment, feems, like Aarons ferpent, to have fwallowed up the reft. It is like the yellow fever in difeafe, as deforibed by yodenham and Ruft ; wherever it prevails, it expels or abforbs all fonalier crimes.— This idea is not merely ludierous. This natural that when the paffions of men are all directed to one point, that one object fhould engroß the minds of the na-tion—the purfuit of that object fhould of ample employment in punifning that ommon crime. All the furious paffions, the pride, the envy, the avarice, the putter of the French may now find occu-pation, in afficting the aritfocrats and punifning treafor. When the diffinition of patriors and traitors fhall no longer ex-it, then the punifnment and extermination of bad men will no longer furnifn food for by the vicious paffions, which of confequence will have recourde for gratification, to the vicious paffions, which of confequence will have recourde for gratification, to the vicious crimes which infert all other coun-tions. kinde Were we however to believe the triimphant party in the Convention, we should find that France abounds with crimes. After one faction has taken off another, the victorious patriots fpend a week or two in detailing the crimes of the late tyrants. When La Fayette a great state of defence, but it cannot repel force by force, if the French go to extremities, unless the whole body of the people act in concert with the government. The French have advanced to Borgo, within a few miles of Coni, where the Piedmontefe have an entrenched camp. If the French should drive them from this important poft, they may leave a de-tachment to mafk Coni, the fiege of which would be tedious, and march with the reft of their army to the gates of Turin. We are affured that the Republicans are under the walls of Suza, where the Piedmontele are entrenched. As we do not hear that they have

The fituation of Piedmont is most critical. The French feem ready to penetrate by three or four points, into the heart of the country. A confider-able number of militia is railing to oppole them, a defcription of troops of the line; but we fear the Piedmontefe mafs will not be found a match for the French mafs.
