Extract from the Prefaces

Extract from the Preface.

"To the honor of Mr. Berquin's taffe, it may be faid, that he has duited fimple elegance with interesting variety; but rigidly separated both from the slightest approach of whatever is vulgar or puerile a merit much more cassly praised than imitated. The art of anusing child en, whilst at the same time the Infant Genius is raised and the Heart mended, appears from his works to be so contemptible effort of the mind. Wherever, therefore, the utility of such an undertaking is acknowledged, the reputation of Mr. Berquin must ever be held in deserved esteem.

"Happing such is the agreeable versatility of Mr. Berquin's style and genius, that it would be dissipant to pronounce in what department he excels: whether in the lively or the pathetic; the simple lauguage of narrative, or the animated points of conversation: whether in shrewed remarks upon private life, or in slorid description of the beauties of nature.
