Extract from the Critical Review, April

Extract from the Critical Review, April a 1791, p. 468.
It maybe a tale of truth, for it is now unnatural, and it is a tale of real diffrefs—Charlotte by the artifice of a teacher, retommended to a school from humanity talenter than a conviction of her integrity of the regularity of her former conduct, is enciced from her governess, and accompanies a young officer to America—The marriage cerem ny, if not fargotten, is postponed, and Charlotte dies a martyr to the inconfiancy of her lover, and treachery of his friend,—The situations are artiels and affecting—the descriptions untural and pathetic; we should teel for Charlotte it such a person ever existed, who for one error, scarcely, perhaps deserved so severe a pua person ever existed, who, for one error, scarcely, perhaps deserved so severe a punishment. If it is a siction, poetic justice is not, we think, properly distributed."

EXTRACT FROM THE PREFACE.

"The authors have prefumed to affix to their title the epithet Imparial; and the reason is, because they cannot charge themselves with feeling the smallest bias to any party, but that of truth and liberty; and they starter themselves, that their readers will find not only every circumstance fairly represented, but every centurable action, whoever were the authors or actors; marked in its proper colors. If it was necessary to make a declaration of their own principles, they would say, they are neither tory to make a declaration of their own princi-ples, they would fars, they are neither tory nor republican—They love liberty as Eng lish whigs, and execrate every criminal act by which so noble a cause is endangered and difgraced.

In the present serment of the public mind, they cannot flatter themselves with the hopes of seeing this claim universally acknowledged. On the contrary, they are well assured that these pages will not be acceptable to the zealous of either party. But when time shall diffipate the clouds of political deception, they with some consideric expect that verdict from public opinion, which candon and moderation seldom fail to receive.

EXTRACT FROM THE CRITICAL REVIEW,

JANUARY, 1794—page 12.

We have certainly derived much pleafure, and acquired much information from the perufal of these volumes; and we think them, both for matter and style, worthy the attention of all who interest themselve in events which have so justly excited the curiosity and associations for mankind."
