

BY THIS DAY'S MAILS.

NEW-YORK, July 31.

It is with pleasure we learn, that there is not a single case of the Fever at the Marine Hospital on Staten-Island.

NATCHEZ, May 16, 1800.

Yesterday being the day fixed for the departure of Brigadier General WILKINSON, for the Atlantic States, via New Orleans,

To the Honorable Brigadier General James Wilkinson, Commander in Chief of the United States Army on the Mississippi, &c.

THE citizens of the Mississippi Territory offer you this testimony of their approbation and attachment for the regard you have uniformly manifested during your residence in this country for their rights, and interests, and for your constant endeavours to prevent the jealous and distinctions so common between civil and military communities.

You have, Sir, removed the apprehensions natural to a people who had long lived under a military government, and convinced them, that the troops of the United States have been levied for national defence, and to promote the tranquility and happiness of the citizens.

Your conduct has explained to us the intentions of the Executive of the general government, and has, if possible, increased our attachment to the constitution and the laws of our country, and while we flatter ourselves that your excellent example will be followed by your successor in command, we do unfeignedly lament the cause which renders your departure necessary.

The impressions you leave behind you, are honorable to your character, interesting to our country, and pleasing to the inhabitants, who will ever retain a grateful remembrance of you, and sincerely wish for your happiness and prosperity.

To which the General, after retiring a few minutes, returned the following answer:

To the Honorable Brian Bruin, Esq. Senior Judge of the Mississippi Territory.

THIS testimony from the respectable citizens of the Mississippi Territory, of their approbation of my conduct, is highly acceptable to me, and amply rewards my humble endeavors to promote their interests and their happiness, which will ever be dear to me.

Bound by my orders, and prompted by my inclination, to foster good will and attachment towards the national government among the citizens of the western settlements, the assurances of complacency and satisfaction which I now receive from an enlightened community, are highly flattering to me, and will, I am persuaded, prove acceptable to my superiors.

Reposing entire confidence in the professions of regard which are applied in this address, to the general government, I cannot conceal the joy I derive from the avowal, because I am convinced that the dignity, the independence, the happiness and prosperity of my country, and of my countrymen, must, under God, depend on a firm, cordial and steadfast union of the whole.

To establish this important truth, and to correct the delusions which spring from a superficial view of the vast subject, let us examine the position, figure, extent, soil, and production of the United States, and we shall discover, bonds of reciprocal interest and mutual dependence, manifest in no other nation of the earth, the dissolution of which, must infallibly produce intestine feuds, civil wars, desolation and wretchedness.

That such calamities may be long, very long, averted our country, and that its citizens may enjoy the abundant blessings within their reach, is the first wish of my heart.

To the good people of this territory I acknowledge high obligations, in return for which, I beg them to accept my warmest thanks, with the assurance of a grateful remembrance, and the proffer of my best services.

It is peculiarly pleasing to me to receive a testimonial so honorable from the hand of the first Judge of the territory, in whom I recognize the meritorious war-worn veteran, the acquaintance of my youth, and the man of my affections.

The general was then accompanied by a number of the citizens of Natchez and its vicinity to the river, where he took boat for Loftus Heights, under a salute from the galley, and the liveliest good wishes of the company. He proceeded with the General to Loftus Heights, and saw him set out for the metropolis. The frigate General Green has been dispatched to convey the General and his family, and is now at anchor at the mouth of the Mississippi. Never did I witness more obvious regret than appeared upon both officers and troops upon the departure of their much admired, their beloved commander. Indeed, neither could the expressed, nor still stronger and equally apparent, though silent, impressions of the civil and military on this occasion, have rendered more than was due to the conciliating and attractive character of the General.

Permit me, before I close, to give a very short account of Loftus Heights. Nature (who seems as if she had formed to elevate her soil where her sons were depressed) although she has been frequently liberal of commanding ground on the American margin of this river, has reserved the display of her sublimity for the barrier post at Loftus Heights. The ground within the sweep of the fortifications are a set of picturesque and beautifully varied heights, capable of an infinite diversity of fortification, but, high above the rest, in proud pre-eminence stands Mount Washington on which the citadel will be erected. This eminence commands a view whose circle is at least thirty leagues, exactly bisected by the Mississippi river; it overlooks, and all but overhangs, a water battery now in considerable forwardness, under the immediate superintendance of captain Sterret; its distance from high water mark is 86 1/2 feet, and its elevation above it 294 feet 8 inches. The river directly opposite the fallient angle of the water battery is 639 yards wide, and line enough has not yet been let down to discover its depth. I am not equal to a fanciful pourtray of the General's plan, but I think it may safely be said that when it is completed it will present the handsome military prospect in the United States.

The Supporter.

The non publication of the Daily Newspaper under my direction intitled "The Supporter, or Daily Repast," which has not appeared since Saturday last, calls for an apology from me to my subscribers and customers; and the derangement in the printing of it being sudden. I had not the opportunity of doing it in my own paper, I therefore take his way of informing my subscribers & readers, that owing to a change in the printing thereof the publication will be suspended for some time until other arrangements are completed which will be as soon as possible. In the mean time such persons as chuse to add their names to the list of Subscribers are respectfully informed that subscription papers for that purpose continue open at Chalk's library No. 75, N. The privateer Dolly, Captain Webb, of this port, has captured a fine copper-bottomed French privateer—See Alexandria head in Marine List.

We are this day deprived of the Boston, Baltimore and Wilmington papers; for three successive days the papers of the former place have not been received.

The Subscribers to this Gazette who reside in Germantown, are informed, that their papers are forwarded every afternoon, in one large packet, by the stage, directed to Mr. Riter, at whose house they will on enquiry be found. If they prefer it they can be sent directed to each individual separate; but the practice of jilfering the Gazette from some of the stage-offices, induced the Editor to adopt the present plan.

A friendly correspondent has favored the Editor with a file of London papers, received by the Packet at New-York. Their contents are uninteresting to the politician and the quid nunc; but we shall probably find something for the amusement of the Lounger. The London editors excel in articles of playful levity.

Major-Gen. Charles Cotsworth Pinckney, arrived at George-Town on Friday last.

The New-York Gazette mentions that an entertainment had been given at Louvet's hotel to William Duane, Editor of the Aurora! It is concluded, with sufficient reason, that the party, originally composed of fools, subsequently consisted of drunkards; that treasonable sentiments were uttered, blasphemous toasts given, and smutty songs encored.

It is with pleasure we state, from undoubted authority, that on board the fleet consisting of 28 sail now at State Island—there is not a single instance of ill health; and there are but two indisposed in the Hospital, one of whom has a wound in his head, the other, an intermitting fever, and both able to walk out—There is no foundation whatever for the report of a number of recent deaths.
