French Tuition. UPON AN ANALYTICAL PLAN.

NICHOLAS GOUIN DUFIEF.

Professor of the French Language,

Professor of the French Language,

I AS the honor of informing his Fellow-CitiI zens of Philadelphia, that he will open his School on Monday the 14th of September, at No.
5, fouth Fifth street, and divide his hours of instruction in the following manner.

Attendance on Ladies and Gentlemen, at their own houses, will be given as usual, from 9 o'clock in the merning till 2 in the afternoon.

His afternoon and evening school will begin (swery other day) from 4 to 6, and from 6 till 9.

Translations from either language into the other, performed with accuracy, elegance, screcy and dispatch.

N. B.—NICHOLAS G. DUFIEF, respectfully invites the Ladies and Gentlemen, ambitious to learn the French, to agree with some of their friesds or acquaintances, desirous of receiving leffons in that universal and improved language, to meet at the same hour and place for murual instruction—they may be assured it will be to their advantage to do so, if they peruse with strention
the following.—

To the Lovers of the French Language. ADDRESS.

ADDRESS.

IN an age when fuccessful efforts have been made towards the improvement of the art of Thinking, and when Analysis has been discovered the universal, and sole good method to improve all sciences, and receive infered in it them, it may be a matter of attonishment that it has not been yet generally embraced, and rendered the similar method of learning. The extraordisary rife and progress of Chymaltry, within a very sew years, are entirely due to analysis; but there is an art on which it should have first darted its beneficial rays, I allude to the Teaching of Languages. In sact, Nature, this excellent analyst, was before our eyes guising children in learning the language of their mother, and no shild ever failed in acquiring it, profiting surprisely by her unerring lessons—fully convinced by reason and expérience, that the same method she pursues should be followed as nearly as possible, I adopted, in the course of my instructions, such books established on principles that least deviated from her umple dictates. I soon perceived that the method acquired from these aids was but a very irregular and imperfect Analysis—I, therfore, resolved though with a very small considence in my slender abilities, but animated with zeal for the improvement of those who may wish to learn French from me, to undertake the laborious and arduous task of writing a work grounded on Analytical principles, which might comprehend what is wished for by those applying them felves to the study of the living languages, and am happy to say, I have now nearly concluded it. It consists of three parts.

The first, is a chosen Vocabulary of words most frequently used in speech, containining 2,500—the most natural acceptation of each is determined by a phrase president oit.

The second, contains the French verbs, both regular and irregular, from a new system in which the principal difficulties attending conjugation are first explained, and observations given on the use of each sense, illustrated by proper examples, so as to cuable the lear as to chable the learner to express similar with precision.

The third, is a complete list of those words fermant de sien on de complement de sens entre les autres pareles du discours: that is to say — forming the link or completion of fense between the other parts of speech, whose principal use is to establish in speech that connection on between words, which already exists in the mind between ideas. I have also fully determined the sense and acception of these important words.

(which are divided into appropriate classes to fix them the easier in the memory) by annexing to each examples in French and English.

As I do not intend to publish the above, for some time, and in order, nevertheles, that my pupils may reap the same advancage without it, I hasten to inform those who may be induced to put themselves under my care, that half the time of school (the other half being devoted to other exercises) will be employed in exercising them in the following manner:

We first begin with the Vacability.

will be employed in exercifing them in the following manner:—

We first begin with the Vocabulary; each word of which will be pronounced in English then in French, to be repeated by one or more of the schoolars; and a similar repetition of the phrases before mentioned will follow.

It is worthy of observation, that in our infancy, and as we advance in years, we learn the pronounciation of our vernacular tongue, by pronounciation of our vernacular tongue, by pronouncing word by word; and dnalogy accomplishes what remains to be dope, in order to acquire the necessary knowledge of it. The rules given by Grammarians to attain this object are a most useless to us, and still more so the foreigners, strugging in vain to learn the true pronunciation of a language with the help of slictionaries and Grammar alone. Though I conceive my scholars may attain in the above manner, the accurate pronon aciation of the French language, yet strict attention is paid to their reading in approved authors before we begin the foregoing exercises.

I will pursue nearly the sems method in imparting to them the contents of the two other divisions of my work. I cannot conclude this address without thanking my Fellow-Citizens for the liberal encouragement I have experienced from them, thes six years past, in my prosessional career, presuming that I may be permitted to say, that I have not been altogether undeferving of it.
