French Tuition,
UPON AN ANALYTICAL PLAN.
NICHOLAS GOUIN DUFIEF,
Professor of the French Language.

AS the honor of informing his Fellow-Citizens of Philadelphia, that he will open his School on Monday the 14th of September, at No. 5, fourth Fifth Street, and divide his hours of instruction in the following manner.
Attendance on Ladies and Gentlemen, at their own houses, will be given as usual, from 9 o'clock in the morning till 2 in the afternoon.
His afternoon and evening school will begin (every other day) from 4 to 6, and from 6 till 9. Translations from either language into the other, performed with accuracy, elegance, facility and dispatch.
N. B.—Nicholas G. Dufief, respectfully invites the Ladies and Gentlemen, ambitious to learn the French, to agree with some of their friends or acquaintances, desirous of receiving lessons in that universal and improved language, to meet at the same hour and place for mutual instruction—they may be assured it will be to their advantage to do so, if they peruse with attention the following—

To the Lovers of the French Language.
ADDRESS.

IN an age when successful efforts have been made towards the improvement of the art of Thinking, and when Analysis has been discovered the universal, and sole, good method to improve all sciences, and receive instruction in them, it may be a matter of astonishment that it has not been yet generally embraced, and rendered the familiar method of learning. The extraordinary rise and progress of Chemistry, within a very few years, are entirely due to analysis; but there is an art on which it should have first directed its beneficent rays, I allude to the Teaching of Languages, in fact, Nature, this excellent analysis, was before our eyes guiding children in learning the language of their mother, and no child ever failed in acquiring it, profiting surprisingly by her unerring lessons—Fully convinced by reason and experience, that the same method the purists should be followed as nearly as possible, I adopted, in the course of my instructions, such books established on principles that least deviated from her simple dictates. I soon perceived that the method acquired from these aids was but a very irregular and imperfect Analysis—I, therefore, resolved though with a very small confidence in my slender abilities, but animated with zeal for the improvement of those who may wish to learn French from me, to undertake the laborious and arduous task of writing a work, grounded on Analytical principles, which might comprehend what is wished for by those applying themselves to the study of the living languages, and am happy to say, I have now nearly concluded it. It consists of three parts.

The first, is a chosen Vocabulary of words most frequently used in speech, containing 2,500—the most natural acceptance of each is determined by a phrase prefixed to it.
The second, contains the French verbs, both regular and irregular, from a new system in which the principal difficulties attending conjugation are first explained, and observations given on the use of each tense, illustrated by proper examples, so as to enable the learner to express himself with precision.
The third, is a complete list of those words serving as a link or de complément de sens entre les autres parties du discours; that is to say—forming the link or completion of sense between the other parts of speech, whose principal use it is to establish in speech that connection between words, which already exists in the mind between ideas. I have also fully determined the sense and acception of these important words (which are divided into appropriate classes to fix them the easier in the memory) by annexing to each examples in French and English.

As I do not intend to publish the above, for some time, and in order, nevertheless, that my pupils may reap the same advantage without it, I hasten to inform those who may be induced to purchase themselves under my care, that half the time of school (the other half being devoted to other exercises) will be employed in exercising them in the following manner—
We first begin with the Vocabulary; each word of which will be pronounced in English then in French, to be repeated by one or more of the scholars; and a similar repetition of the phrases before mentioned will follow.

It is worthy of observation, that in our infancy, and as we advance in years, we learn the pronunciation of our vernacular tongue, by pronouncing word by word; and Analogy accomplishes what remains to be done, in order to acquire the necessary knowledge of it. The rules given by Grammarians to attain in this object are a most useless to us, and still more so to the foreigners, struggling in vain to learn the true pronunciation of a language with the help of dictionaries and Grammar alone. Though I conceive my scholars may attain in the above manner, the accurate pronunciation of the French language, yet strict attention is paid to their reading in approved authors before we begin the foregoing exercises.
I will pursue nearly the same method in imparting to them the contents of the two other divisions of my work. I cannot conclude this address without thanking my Fellow Citizens for the liberal encouragement I have experienced from them, the six years past, in my professional career, presuming that I may be permitted to say, that I have not been altogether undeserving of it.

The Frenchman
WHO refused to give up a STOLEN POINTER DOG when demanded of him on Wednesday morning last about seven o'clock, by the servant of the owner, at the corner of Arch and Sixth Streets, is desired to send him to the office of this Gazette, or diligent search will be made after him, and he will be prosecuted as the thief. The Dog is white, excepting a yellow spot on his back, one yellow ear, and two or three yellow spots on his forehead—the other ear is speckled—he is very poor and hip shot. An handsome reward will be given for the dog, and Five Dollars on conviction of the thief. The Frenchman is a tall thin man, of a complexion very dark, and dressed in black clothes (excepting a striped blue and white gingham coat)—He was seen with the dog in company with a short fat man, in Race near Seventh Street, on Sunday afternoon last.
