French Tuition, UPON AN ANALYTICAL PLAN.

NICHOLAS GOUIN DUFIEF, Professor of the French Language, HAS the honor of informing his Fellow-Citizens of Philadelphia, that he will open his School on Monday the 14th of September, at No. 5, South Fifth Street, and divide his hours of instruction in the following manner.

Attendance on Ladies and Gentlemen, at their own houses, will be given as usual, from 9 o'clock in the morning till 2 in the afternoon. His afternoon and evening school will begin (every other day) from 4 to 6, and from 6 till 9.

Translations from either language into the other, performed with accuracy, elegance, secrecy and dispatch. N. B.—NICHOLAS G. DUFIEF, respectfully invites the Ladies and Gentlemen, ambitious to learn the French, to agree with some of their friends or acquaintances, desirous of receiving lessons in that universal and improved language, to meet at the same hour and place for mutual instruction—they may be assured it will be to their advantage to do so, if they peruse with attention the following—

To the Lovers of the French Language, ADDRESS.

IN an age when successful efforts have been made towards the improvement of the art of Thinking, and when Analysis has been discovered the universal, and sole good method to improve all sciences, and receive instruction in them, it may be a matter of astonishment that it has not been yet generally embraced, and rendered the familiar method of learning.

The first, is a complete Vocabulary of words most frequently used in speech, containing 2,000—the most natural acceptance of each is determined by a phrase prefixed to it.

The second, contains the French verbs, both regular and irregular, from a new system in which the principal difficulties attending conjugation are first explained, and observations given on the use of each tense, illustrated by proper examples, so as to enable the learner to express himself with precision.

The third, is a complete list of those words servant de lieu, ou de complement de sens entre les autres paroles du discours: that is to say—forming the link or completion of sentences between the other parts of speech, whose principal use is to establish in speech that connection between words, which already exists in the mind between ideas.

As I do not intend to publish the above, for some time, and in order, nevertheless, that my pupils may reap the same advantage without it, I hasten to inform those who may be induced to put themselves under my care, that half the time of school (the other half being devoted to other exercises) will be employed in exercising them in the following manner:—

We first begin with the Vocabulary; each word of which will be pronounced in English; then in French; to be repeated by one or more of the scholars; and a familiar repetition of the phrases before mentioned will follow.

It is worthy of observation, that in our infancy, and as we advance in years, we learn the pronunciation of our vernacular tongue, by pronouncing word by word; and Analysis accomplishes what remains to be done, in order to acquire the necessary knowledge of it.

The rules given by Gramarians to attain this object are almost useless to us, and still more so to the foreigners, struggling in vain to learn the true pronunciation of a language with the help of dictionaries and Grammars alone.

Though I conceive my scholars may attain in the above manner, the accurate pronunciation of the French language, yet strict attention is paid to their reading in approved authors before we begin the foregoing exercises.

I will pursue nearly the same method in imparting to them the contents of the two other divisions of my work. I cannot conclude this address without thanking my Fellow-Citizens for the liberal encouragement I have experienced from them, since six years past, in my professional career, presuming that I may be permitted to say, that I have not been altogether undeserving of it.
