Folian Demogratis: From a. distant, part of our own noble Commonwealth, from beyond the Allegheny Mountains, I have come to join your enthusiastic gathering, to-night, for the purpose of participating with the citizens of Philidelphia in the celebration of an amintersary, the most brilliant in history—the anniversary of the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. In the twelfth year of American Independence, on the 17th of Septomber, 1787, the work was consummated at Philadelphia, and the first name attached to the precious document was the name of George, Washington. This was done in a city and State made immortal by the signing of the Declaration of Independence. It has the names of men dear to every American.

The Republican party is the same party which came into-power in the times of the younged-Adams, and was net by Jackson. We find thom now urging sentiments at war with the best interests of the country. Who is their standard-beaver? David Wilmot, a deserter from the Demogratio party. He is the author of the Wilmot he way in the work of the Wellhot, Virginia and in the Mexican war it came near runing our best hopes. It is strange that this party should hear. Mr. Wilmot, he would be apt to imagine that we are all Africans. Mr. W. as a member of Congress and jodge, has sworn to support the Consumation of the United States, but he has resigned his judgeship, and is now waging a war against that very instrument by preaching opposition to the decision in the Dread Scott case.
