SERMON BY REV. C. W. SHIELDS, ON THE DEPRAVITY OF OUR SATURE, TABORISH for The France A sermon, founded muon the following text of Scripture, was recently preached in the Socond Presbyterian Church, Seyenth streak below Arch, by the pastor; Rev. O. W. Striktow "Port knew that in me. that is; it was glach dwellich the good thing," - Bomans vis., 18. In this, and the subjoined passages of Sorip

Second 4 readyterian charma, Seventh alters, below Arub, by the pastor, Rev. O. W. Stinkins, "For I know that is not, that is, is way flash, dwellith no good thing,",-Bomma vit., 18. In this, and the subjoined passages of Sorip-ture, sidt the speaker, the Aposile Paul was evidently commenting upon what was passing in his own mind, as he observed the conflict between two apparently integonistic natures within himself, and from which he had come to the conclusion implied in the text, that this seeming contrartery of smotion was in-between and deployed by true Christians in altice seem and deployed by true Christians in altice seem and cellored by true Christians in altice seem and cellored by true Christians in altice seem and cellored by true Christians in the vinces of God's spirit within them. They tried themselves by their own standards, which were human, and consequently imperfect, be-ing regulated and formed by the conflict tian's sense of duty was based the of the God, and before which even the pipers. The more than and consequently inperfect, be-ing regulated and formed by the conflict that's beneficies of the the two the func-tion's and before which even the pipers. Lest this sweeping confession, however, should savor of undue severity, Paul had continue inserted into it a most important qualifying exception, viz: "that is, in my first, dwelleth "no good thing if we might the table is easy that has had thing," by which it would be seen that he had the purest saint, and most exemplary Ohris-tian. Inus far, the fact merely that, the law of the spirit was at variance with the law of the figsh was dwelt upon, but the point had now arrived at which the speaker proposed to con-sider why it was that no stindard of man's mo-railty in his unregenerate state could be per-fect, which inquiry constituted the Third and last main division of his difference between the outward standard of men; and the inward standard as revealed by the spirit of God, the first was, that those outward standards, set up among men, were themselves as widely dif-ferent as the nature and circumstances of those adopting them were dissimilar. Thus, manifestly; the judgment which a man formed of his own standard of rectitude, would de-pend wholly upon his own conceptions of mopend wholly upon his own conceptions of mo-With the sayage, for example, who believed it to be has day to murder his ene-mies, this uncivilized doctrine was adopted into his code. And when we come to ask tho men of the world for their standard, in the pre-sent enlightened age, we should find that in both action and profession, it consisted in what from the force of custom contained both action and profession, it consisted in what, from the force of custom and usage, they felt to be their duty, as citizens, to the State and to society. But, to the man enlightened by the spirit within him, this mere escape from public re-prehension and self-condemnation was not sufficient. For such as had not experienced that light within, which had enabled Paul to see himself as he really was, it was of course impossible to understand why it was that a model of integrity should, according to Paul's confession, be at the same time an embodi-mont of corruption as every Christian felt himself to be. And now, to realize at a glance the justness of Paul's confession in the text, we need only look to the standard which (5d Is had set up for us in his luw-that hely, just, model of integrity should, according to Paul's confession, be at the same time an embodi-mont of corruption as every Christian folt himself to be. And now, to realize at a glance the justness of Paul's confession in the text, we need only look to the standard which God had set up for us in his law-itat holy, just, and good law, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul; and with all thy mind, "s' sind thy neighbor at thyself." Where, ho would ask, could we find the man so pure as to be able to stand up Eternal 7. Where could we find that saint on earth whose, every thought, word, and deed, was prompted by a pure, holy. find the man so pure as to be able to stand up immoculato. bolove this - standard of the Beternal 7- Where could we find that sain on earth whose, every thought, word and deed, was prompled by a pure, holy and ferven love to God 7 And who was there among the most unselfab and period. that, in his intercourse with mon, accord at all times towards his neighbor as if he weis' and pool the standard, the best must fail infinitely short, and this conted who could doubt his own depraying? But there was a further diversity between the experience of Faul and the mon of this sense, and he would say that all attempts at the performance of dury which were not the saint and the sinner had exchanged phices it be given as the bis ordeal, who could doubt his own depraying? But there was a further diversity between the experience of faul and the mon of this sense, and he would as that an mod welled the performance of dury which were not this sett to fake an outward ylew, merely, of the fact the saint and the sinner had exchanged phices the one was humbled with a sense of his gen to take an outward ylew, merely, of the fact the saint and the sinner had exchanged phices the orgentee, in would actually seem as if the sint and the sinner had exchanged phices by the degrees of this spirit. And now, form to take an outward ylew, merely, of the fact the sinner had exchanged phices By the degrees of this spirit. And we see the section with a sense of his spirit. An other distinction between those who be invest. Upon the disting exceed a sin from a standard, the spirit. An other distinction between thes a graving sain the sinner had the figurige of the take, and the sinner had exchanged phices. By the degrees of this spirit has a graving sain the sinner sing serving sain the diving figuring for these who do now, might have ceased to had the figurige of the take, and the sinner sing were conder the singer figuring the serving know that in me, that is, in n y flesh, dwelleth no good thing."

 FOR ALL DISRASES OF THE BLOOD there is no botter and thoe base scale. For on the blood is impure the whole body is full of disease Blood letting may answer for a time, hut cleansing a part will not purify the whole. At the fognitain we must begin, and to cleanse the blood there is no better remedy than these invaluable Bitters.
