conversationist, from the number of books he which retained and could reproduce at will whatever he had once read or heard—but his recollections, like his acquirements, perished with him. A critic on his life has sensibly said, "What keys of ethnological caskets did he possess! He enjoyed the treasures, exhibited them to his friends and favorites, and carried those keys with him to the tomb. His epitaph says well that he was memorable for his morality, piety, knowledge, and skill in languages. It does not say, as it ought to have had warrant to affirm, that he was also the benefactor of his own and of coming generations. To these this gentle, accomplished, and yet, in one instance, indolent scholar, leaves nothing-but the notoriety of his acquirements, and the reputation of having done little with them save for passing purposes. He was one of those who feel careless to do any thing for the posthem. He was contented with his linguistic treasures, as those selfish men are who live on the annuities they have purchased, and who dying, bequeath nothing to their heirs. His.

But what most distinguished him was his kindness and benignity of manuer to poor, degraded, outcast humanity. The law through him, chastised the follies, the vices, and the crimes of man; but the culprit saw that the judge regarded even him as one of the great brotherhood of man, and his heart grew softer and better as the balm of morey was poured into it.

The younger members of the profession lost much in his retirement. He was their friend, their counselor. He felt with them the anxieties, the difficulties, the temptations which daily beset the young aspiring mind, chafed and maddened by earthy oircumstances which dragged it down to earth. On Friday forenoon; a widow woman named Belisle, and a man named Jean Baptists Desfores, were excepted at Montreal for the murder of Catharine-Freyort. The jall where the execution took place was surrounded by affect thousand speciators, many of whom were women, and it is stated that the latter erifoced as much anxiety to witness the painful sight as their male companions. The condemned were perfectly composed, and expressed themselves freedy to "meet their Saviouri, and longed for the time to come when they should see him." They both proclaimed themselves, guilty from the scaffold. Just as the drop was about to fall, nearly the entire crowd, knelt, and uncovered their heads. During the "execution the bells of the Boman Catholic churches tolled."

In Cincinnati, last week, a wager was made by a Scotohman that he could kill twelve rats, in regular dog fashion, in less time than a Scotoh terrier, famous fer the destruction of the noxicus vermin. The man and the dog were placed in the ring, and both went to work energedically and bravely. The human creature would enated up the rats in his hand; and biting them across the neck and spine, precisely, as the terrier, kill them at once. So the did well, but the man killed his twelfth rat just as the dog had finished his tenth. When the Scotchman came out of the ring he was covered with blood, and his hands were bitten in various places, but he seemed to care nothing for his wounds, after obtaining a triumph over a dog.
