The start to the write of habeas corpus issued by piego Orden on Thursday, came un for a hearting yeacted with mering at nine o'clock at the Hudson City court house. Mr. Ransom appeared as genusels for Colonel Blount, who was ale o present, and Mr. Mulford as connect for Mr. Huboks and Captain de Riviere. There were but fow spectators in court, and those few were not favored with a signt either of Miss Blount, her moliter. Captain de Riviere, ones of whom were forthcoming The sheriff presented his return to the write, in which his certified to a personal service upon Mr. Huncke, proprietor of the Hotel Napoleon, and a sirvice upon Captain de Riviere, through his attorney. Mr Mulford, who accepted the same as a due service upon his client. Objection being made to this service by the counsel for Colonel Blount Mr. Mulford, who accepted the same as a due service upon his client. Objection being made to this service by the counsel for Colonel Blount Mr. Mulford, who accepted the same as a sarch, which he did; that failing to find De Riviere, he then told the sheriff he could leave the writ, he told him that Capt. De Riviere had gone out to take a walk, but requested him to make a sourch, which he did; that failing to find De Riviere, which were the same purpose; that afterwards, at about 4 o'clock P. M. of that day, he saw De Riviere, at the hotel, informed him of the service of the writ, and made arrangements to meet him the next morning, when he was to make cath to the proper affidayits, which were to be drawn up in the meantime by his counsel; that he left Hobokon about 6 clock P. M. of that officers, had been at the hotel to arrest Capt. De Riviere on another process, and that he had left. He added that he The Da Biviere Scandal Agein. satisfy him that his presence would no longer be of service to himself, he proceeded quietly upstein, put on his contand but, and, with the aid of the serving of the servi stairs, putous his coat and bat, and, with the sid of the servant girl, made his exit out of the back door. The sugacious officers having at length got through with their bar-room broils, produced their requisition from the Grovernor, and were 'allowed to go up stairs, and search for the Captain at their leisure. The officers complain loudly of chaving been forcibly resisted in their attempted service of the process, but the above are the true-facts of the case, as derived from several reliable witnesses, who were present at the time. Their want of specess was entirely owing to their own stanplaity.
Captain de Riviera, after he had made his exit from the hotel, was joined by two of his friends who conducted him to the Elyslan Fields, and from who conducted him to the Elystan Fields, and from there he was rowed in a boat, they say, to New York It is generally believed, however, at Hobeken, that he is concealed somewhere in that piace. He had not been arrested at ten o'clock last night, and there is not much prospect that he will be for some time to come. Thus the hero and heroine of this romance have both disappeared from public view.

Mrs Blount alone of the trio, now remains at the Hotel Napoleon, where she will have leisure to prepare her forthcoming "statement" to the public. [Prom the New York Herald of last evening.] [From the New York Herald of last evening.]
Just pravious to the Captain's disappearance, a French gentleman, who has been sequalized with him for some time, called to see him, and while in conversation asked the Zouave wby he insisted in destroying the happiness of Mr. Blount and his family, be knowing full well that it was never his intention to marry Miss Blount in reply to this the Captain, it is said, remarked that he was well aware of that fact, but Mrs. Blount was worth about $150,000; that her husband had not got that he [de Riviere] was fool enough to lose that anything, and he would like to know if he thought that he ide Riviere was fool onough to lose that pile.

This is something like a remark which Mrs. Blount was enid to have made, which was that she was certain to make her daughter—by allowing her to marry de Riviere—one of the first ladies to the Empres.

At to Mrs. Blount, she still remains at the hotel. She has written on to Mobile for money, with which, when it arrives, she says she will pay up and her bills, and then proceed to Mobile and sell her estate; after which she will return North.

new uncoveries made and practised in the neuts of symblesloggy and soundrelism has become a feasible idea, if not a necessary institution. Such a publication in the hands of an enterprising corps of detectives would, if generally circulated, be likely to put the too condding portion of humanity on their guard, and, if reports may be credited, in many cases, save woman ity from the mortification srising from the wrong doin in this line even of the purer sex:
The lest game that has come under our notice suggestive of the above may be stated thus: On Friday afternoon of last week, two men of genteel appearance, Ole tall the other short, entered the store of Messer J G Maxwell & Son on the southwest corner of Ele counter a double, eagle, for which they asked to be ac-commodated with smaller charge. The cashier (a lady) immediately compiled with this request by hand-ing them a five-dollar piece and six quarter eagles. In ing them a nve-colar piece and mx quarter eagers. In order to carry out their scheme, the men objected to the change as it was given, stating that they desired it is larger pieces, or else to have their double eagle returned. Not being able to make the change is accordance with their expressed wishes, the piece was at once returned by the lady at the desk, and the smaller returned by the lady at the desk, and the smaller pieces handed over by the men, when they immediately loft the premises with great haste. Upon counting the returned pieces, however, it was ascertained that one of the quarter eagles was missing.

Mr. Maxwell entering the store at that moment, and being told of what had passed, started immediately in their purnit. He had no sooner entered the street than he discovered the parties described coming out of the store of Mr. Yogel, a few doors below. Thinking that perhaps a similar dodge had been attempted there also, Mr. M. entered, and in a few seconds was made acquainted with the fellowing: The men had entered Mr. Yogel's, and again presented their twenty-dollar Mr. Vogol's, and again presented their twenty-dollar piece for change. In this case the change was given in fives, when it was again objected to, on the ground that they desired it in small smoney, which not being found convenient of course induced the return of their build, they separated and ran, and the tell one having the advantage in point of locomotion, it was thought advisable, of the two, to pursue the other, which was to done; and after a hotrace, a star turning up by the way, the latter was captured and taken before Alderman Brazer, Fifth street, above Race, from whence, after having made sundry ineffectual efforts to have the matter settled, he was removed to the lockup in default of buil. Mr. Maxwell acted a creditable part in this matter, and if all parlies thus imposed upon were to exercise a similar detergination to have the offenders frought to justice, these games of swindling would ere long be effectually checked.
