He will commence the campaign on the 27th of July, at Olinton, in the northern part of the State, and will make between fifty and one hundred speeches between that time and the election. The party is com-pletely organized, and the leaders from the va-rions sections of the State are confident that they will make a more favorable report of themselves at the election in November than they have ever given heretofore. You cannot imagine the onthusises which exists in the party, or the exertions that even its humblest members are making to insure a glorious triumph. "The prairies," as a gen-tleman remarked on the cars the other day, "are on fire; the people are beside themselves." Senator Douglas, wherever he speaks, carries conviction to the minds of his audience by the fair, candid, and foreible manner in which he dis-suses the questions of the day and the points at issue between himself and Mr. Lincoln. If has placed the latter on the defensive, and will keep him there until the close of the contest. Lincoln is no match for Douglas, and so acknowledged in a speech on Saturday night, wherein he lamented the difference in their relative positions ; but he was the most popular and meet able man the Re-publicans could take up. In accepting his nomi-tation at their hands, and declaring his princi-ples, he took holder Abolition grounds than that party ever occupied; and since it has been exposed his friends have been trying to get him off, but in vain, for each time he attompts to squirm out of them he only sinks deeper in the mire.
