by ine spane 2. Lod were the saved of God, and they alone. He desired to consider this subject mainly from these two polats — First, the necessity of the intervessory influences of the Holy Spirit in the word, and secondly the opera-tions of that same Spirit in our hearts. The first demonstration of the text was that there was such a thing as prayer, and which, fo be worth snything, naturally implied that God is not absolutely inchangeable in his purposes toward his children. Viewed in this light, prayer, to a Christian, was either everything or nothing; if the prayers of the rightcous were of any avail, as the Bible taught us they were of any avail, as the Bible taught us they were, then the efficiency of prayer is estab-lished, and the professor or non-professor who set himself up in contradiction of this great, vital truth, virtually assumed that to be no-thing which God in his word tells us is every-thing. Nor would it be difficult to prove that the man who allowed himself to fall away from his hellaf in the efficance of preserves. the main who allowed nimber to tail away from his bellef in the efficacy of prayer was rapidly approaching the last link in the backslider's chain, and would ere long obliged to this up the amentation, "The harvest is control to same the ended, and 1-aur hot saved "Nothing' was more self-ovident than that the man who did not believe in prayer never never never believe: in prayer never prayed; nor was there anything more conclusive in the teach-ings of the Bible than that without, prayer no man can be sayed. God was represented, to us as neither an ignorant nor unconcerned spec-

man can be sayed. . God was represented to in as an either an ignorant nor unconcerned spec-stator. He know as well what was going on upon his footstool as around his throne, and was fully cognizant of all that was passing in H the hearts of his sinful and disobedient crea. tures on earth, as what transpired among the loyal hosts of Heaven. The contrast which the Almighty was thus constantly beholding was calculated to elicit, towards his unfortunate children, here such feeling as may be supposed to dwell in a being of 'infinite love, one who is not willing that any should perish, but that all should turn from their sins and live. If, then, men are convinced of their need of salvation, and God is a being of love desiring that all should be saved? He would answer first, because men desired net to be saved; they said practically, "depart from us, we desire not the salvation of God.". Without making just such as a profession, the sentiments of most uncon-verted persons were such as the speaker had heard of having been sume at some of the verted persons were such as the speaker had heard of having been sung at some of the meetings of the Sunday Institute—
