This nourishment is made up of those properties in grain obomically known as sectharine matter, gluten, &c. The saccharine matter contributes most of the nutrishment, and contains also an active principle which, when received into the stomach as a component of bread, aids digestion. These great nourishing and invigorating properties of grain produce, under the action of heat and by the aid of certain machiner, a most powerful stimulant. If such a product can be extracted from grain by arti-focal means, it indicates, numistakably, the influence which the backs powers of man, when subjected to the natural chemical action of the human stomach. If seems, therefore, that this is an indispensable pro-perty of grain, as a nourishmost, given to its for the most benoficent purpose, and consequently should be rotaised, as far as practicable, in all the preparations of grain for food.
