Her nanners were elegant, seemingly frank, graceful, and persuasive. She persuaded CAN-NING to join Prussia and France in battling for the freedom of Greece-not that she cared one cent for the Greeks, but because to separate Greece from Turkey would be to strengthen Russia, which, to this very hour, has a preponderating influence in a land, hallowed by art, history, poetry, and tradition, but cursed with inhabitants whose moral notions of right and wrong are those of the veriest rapscallions on the face of the earth. With Belgium it was different. Russia had which urged the Poles to rebellion, was a cause of much unpasiness to the Emperor NICHOLAS. It was impossible for the Princess LIEVEN to prevent the establishment of Belgium as an independent monarchy. Still less could she impede the acceptance, by Prince LEOPOLD, of the sceptre which the Belgians proffered to him. Already, influenced by the Princess LIEVEN, directly and indirectly, LEO FOLD had refused the Grown of Greece. LEO-FOLD became King of the Belgians, and the Emperor NICHOLAS, for the first time, distrust ed the sagacity of the Princess LIEVEN. Her recall was not remote. Returning to Russia, in 1834, in her fiftieth year, she was shorn of her beams. Her husband, who was a most common-place man was honored with the office of guardian to the Grand Duke ALEXANDER, now the reigning Czar. "But," as Bynox says, "quiet to uick bosoms is a bane," and inaction proyed eeply, mind and body, upon the Princes LIEVEN. She had lived in excitement, and now, at an age when the bloom of youth had leparted, she found herself considered "an In 1835 the first great blow struck heavily upon her heart. It has been said that the ladies of the Emperor's harem are learning to rido on horseback, so that, in an comergency, they may be ready to make their es-cape to a u one northern likitude, perhave to the anoient capital of the Manchu race. write, Kookuk has a population of fifteen thousand souls, and is one of the handsomest and best built amongst the young clies of the West. The most of the houses are brick-of good architectural design, and the stores on Main street will compare favora-bly with those on Chestnut street, Philadelphia, twenty years ago. The site is a dmirably adapted upon which to build a large dity. Rising from the river, as it were, is a series of plateaus, it stretches away some two miles into the country-the whole sur-rounded by a range of gently swelling highlands in the distance, giving the appearance of a vast amphitheatre, adding benuty and variety to the scene, and enabling the inbabitants to drein the whole city towards the river, a faot which they have fully availed themselves of, and which thes rendered Keokuk one of the heat'ticst cities of the Union, where the dootor may exclaim, with Othello, that his "eccupation's gone". Drainage, my dear Press, is a great institution, and has been too much neglected in the smost of our cities I have been informed that the annual business of Keokuk now amounts to over soven millions of dollars, and I can believe it, for wagons were on the streets all the way from "Setting Son," or some such place in the Far West-"La. Ia. Ia." " stitutionalists of the Chiapas were mustering for an invasion, which Surlat was actively proparing to resist. In the meantime, the foreign commis and; resideuts were complaining sadly of the wrongs they experience at the hands of the Go-vernment and the mob.

Bat how has Keekuk stood through the "orash and orisis" of the past twelve months? "Aye, there's the rub!" Like all young cities that had their material improvements to build; like the young merchant, who had not gained that pationt experience taught, and taught only in the dear, hut ever to be remembered, school of histribula-tion; like the gay ship, with all her canvas spread and bunting aloft, caught in the durrisane, and. for the time being, thrown upon her beam ends. Kookuk has suffered, and suffered severely, in common with overy enterprising place in the land, but the gallant ship, and still more gallant orew, are now again breasting the waves, the haven of hope lies before them, and they doubtless will, ulti-matoly, reach the port in safety. Let the follow-ing, which I cull from the Daily Gate City, of the 28th ult, toll the story: "KEORUM LIFFOR ENTRY OF AND AND AND seed that of any provious year, with the exception of the two last, and that in no year had the improvements avoraged as high in obaracter and cost as this. Since then we have gathered up some items with reference to the quantity and oharacter of the buildings this season, which will be found below." Here follows a list and description of the defir-rent building, too long and elaborate tor your co-lumms: suffece it to say that the list comprises
