Trish Abductions. The case of Mr. John CAnden, "a fine young Irish gentleman, one of the modern ime," who was imprisoned, with hard labor, in 1854-'56, for forcibly attempting to run away with an heiress, in Tipperary, has suggested the idea of tracing the history of Ab. luction, as an institution, in Ireland. First, we would say that whenever we write a Dic tionary, it shall contain such an item as this: ABDUCTION, n. s. (Latin, ab and duco)-The foroibly running away with an heiress. See Ireland.

For centuries it has been part and parcel of rish privileges to obtain Sabine wives; to eize them by the right of the strong arm wed them, in fear of a ruined character ; and bring them home, rather exulting than otherwise, at the iclat of such a rough wooing. At the same time, it must be admitted that bduction is not exclusively confined to Ireland.' It flourishes on other soils, but is indigenous to that of the Emerald Isle.

Rather, to be correct, should we speak of it in the past tense. As CARDEN's case shows, things. rary on his side. are so changed in Ireland, that a man canno run off with a pretty girl, to marry her, by the nticement of force-for, if he fail in the at-im, and punishes him ! Therefore, to be accurate, let us say that Abduction used to be one of the "blessed of the said Milesian, and it deliver into one of institutions of old Ireland." A man fancied a girl, (he did not much mind her beauty, provided she had money,) and, knowing that her relations would object to the marriage, summoned an armed party of friends who assisted him in running away with her. Taken off to the mountains, the lady had no alternative between disgrace and marriage; and, almost inevitably accepting the latter, (performed by degraded clergyman usually called, "a couple-beggar,") would return in a few days or weeks, as the case might be, and immediately take as matronly a place in society as if she had been solemply married . by a Cardinal in a cathedral! There were anti-abduction laws, of course, against those who "carried away maydens that be inheriters :"; but the instances where prosecution or punishment followed are rare. Like the Sabines, the maidens got reconciled to their ravishers. he exclaimed, "there's no justice for Ireland On the whole, the offence was so popular that even "Abduction Clubs" were established.

As to the antiquity of Abductions. The earliest authentic record is dated about the year 1170, and is to the effect that the King that we would, and warn him, in a friendly of Leinster ran away with the fair and frail DEVORGLE, which led to her husband's soliciting aid from HENRY II, of England, ending, as every ono knows, in the invasion and con quest of the "first gem of the sea." From that period abduction became prevalent in Ircland. It was an outrage, confessedly-but so agreeable to the spirit of the times, so congenial to the ardent character of the men, so accordant with the romantic feelings of the women, that the gallant who accomplished this feat was looked upon as a fine dashing fellow, and the lady who was made the object of such rough wooing was rather e bold fol- head, were he still alive, on learning that CAR-ball, where he exercised all his talents to be agreeable, and, in the confusion of the breaking-up, would bear her away -sometimes in a chaise, but more commonly on horseback. This, of course, with or without her own consent. His friends would ride with him, as escort, and the usual termination ociety, have accomplished much towards ame-(though there often was pursuit and some. lorating the condition of that useful class of men, times recapture) was marriage. The abductor by surrounding them with wholesome influences might say, with Glenalvon, "I'll woo her when they land among us, and extending to them as the lion woos his bride," but it rarely hapa cordial hand of fraternal recognition; and whatover service the religious community can do to pened that the lady, on her return home brought the law to bear upon her ravishersomehow or other the offences were many and the prosecutions very few. The progress of civilization during the last forty or fifty years has nearly put an end to abduttion. Such cases as that of Mr. CAR-DEN would have been scarcely talked about for the fact that there had never been such a thing as two days, formerly. Irish novelists-for example, BANIM, LOVER, CARLETON, and GRIF-FIN-have made use of the old abduction system in their works of fiction. In fact, it lives now only in memory. "The wonder in Ireland was, not that Mr. CARDEN should have endeavored to run away with an English heiress against her will, but that the law should have punished him for the eighty-five feet by sixty, which they completed in attempt. For Mr. OARDEN had a fine estate of $10,000 a year; also was a magistrate, and popular-as such; and somehow also had en-listed; the sympathies of the ladies of Tippe-

It is within our knowledge, that, exactly ten years ago, an Irish gentleman, in London, was walted upon by a sheriff's officer, with a narrow empt, the law lays him by the heels, trics slip of parchment, (technically called a Ca. of this civy, the one in the afternoon by Rev. OGISTHER, MAY - HENRY F	it appeared as if it was she who was carrying him off ! There is a memorable instance of this which occurred in the higher classes of Irish gentry. Captain EDGEWORTH, a widower with one son, married Mrs. BRIDGEMAN, a widow with an only daughter. At the ripe age of 16 and 16, these children declared their mutual love. The mother refused her con- sent. The young lady was an heiress, and her mother it was known would proceed to the utmost severity of the law against any one who should carry her off. Love has many ex- pedients, and the lady, having first mounted on her horso, assisted her boy-lever to a seat behind her. In this way she ran away with him. They were married and forgiven. MARIA EDGEWORTH, the Irish writer, was a direct de- scendant of this maringo, and the writer of this article heard the story from her own Hips. At longth, some seventy or eighty years ago the running-away system had become se goneral that an association was formed in the South of Ireland, called "The Abduction Glub." The members, it was averred, were solemnly confederated under the obligation of an oath, to assist in carrying off such young women as might be agreed upon. The mem- bers were chiefly of the class, then abounding in Ireland, popularly called "Squireens," and consisted of the younger sons or relations of respectable families, well brought up but with small or no patrimony, and too proud to carn their living honestly. They mingled freely in the pastimes of the poasan try, who (to use their own phrase) would "get through fire and water to sorve them," am would assist them in any exploit, howeve wild or illegal. The Club had spices in every respectable	from a favorite song of the oid Ratio halistic hymn book, where it reads, "Wir glauben all an Einen Gott, Ohrist, Jude, Heid' und Hottentott." "This act, although bittorly consured by many of the citizons, is as warmly defended by others, the lattor, howover, being in the minority, as it would seem from the fact that the Town Council has adopted, unanimously, a potition to the Prince Regeat of Prussia, praying that the Jesuits might be fabildon ever to return to Graudenz. The more liberal portion of the press, those even who entertain anti-Jesuit views, oppose this proscription on the ground that the only way for truth to triumph is, for all parties and denomina- tions to have fair play.
