The Lind of the Bible is part of the Divine Revelation. It bears testimony essential to fatth, and gives lessons invaluable in exposition. Both have been written all over the fair face of Pelentine, and decely graven there by the finger of God in characters of living light. To collect this testimony and popularite these tessons for the biblical attident of every age and class is the prominent design of this work. For twenty-five years the anthor has been permitted to read the Book by the light which the Land sheds upon it; and he now hands over this friendly torch to those who have not been employed to sid the pen. A large number of pictorial illustrations are introduced, and any of them original, and all giving a genuine and true representation of things in the actial, Holy Land of the present day. They are not fancy sketches of imaginary scenes thrown in to embellish the page, but plotures of living manners, studies of sacred topograph, or exponents of in the value of the work.
