SEMI-ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF THE CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL. BLOQUENT SPEECH OF DANIEL DOUGHERTY. Sketches of the Addresses. INCIDENTES OF THEE DAY. [Reported for The Fress.] The onpacity of Jayne's Hall was never more completely tested than yesterday morning, at the Commencement' exercises of the Central High School. The impression which had gone abroad, that the Hall could not contain the mosses that would endeavor to gain admission, had the office of bringing to the Chestnut strest entrance a yast throng of ladies and gentlemen, even before the early hour of nine o'clock, when it was announced the doors would be oppned. From the moment t lie hall-doors were opened, until every available spot in that immense edifice was densely filled, the entering swarm of humanity exceeded any- thing we have ever withessed ; and that smid the rush there should have been no serious socident to record is really a matter of suprise. The jam in assending the broad stairease, owing to the hai- row entrance at the top, was as nearly what might be termed a solid mass of human beings as the cus- tomary necompaniments of mixed audiences could admit of ; yet, with it all, the orushing ordeal was apparently bicoked by all concerned with a de- gree of good humor that was marked on the coun- tion and these composing the orowd. In the scient hour of midnight, when all Nature is hushed in deep repose, we may, by the add of astronomy, gaze upon the beaulies of the heavens, and draw lessons of wisdom and instruction from the sight. It was a sublime facility that thilled 'na', as we gazed upon the multitude of worlds that lined the dark glow of the heavens, nearly if not all of which were greater than the planat we live upon. Oontinning in this strain, he spoke of the men of giganite intelled-of Harsdels and Nawton, and their compeers-who gave their lives to this sine- bling study. If anything, in the inlind of the speaker, proved God the Infinite Being he was, it was the science of astronomy. The very compari- son it exhibited showed the difference between finite power and infinite wisdom. Mankind, with all its labor and its adventure, and its curning, was enabled to keep a million million earths in motion, and in order, too, without any perceptible effort of his tower. We had but to examine the scale on which the heavens are built to feel the truth that there is a God. And all round his throne, forver and his gluy. The impression which had gone abroad, that the Hall could not contain the messes that would endeavor to gain admission, had the effect of bringing to the Chestnut-stroot entrance a vast throng of ladies and gentlemen, even before the early hour of nine o'elock, when it was announced the doors would be oppned. From the moment ties hall doors were opened, until every available spot in that immense edifice was densely filled, the entering system of humanity exceeded any- thing we have ever witnessed ; and that amild the rush there should have been no serious scoident to record is really a matter of surprise. The jam in ascending the broad staircase, owing to the nar- row entrance at the top, was snearly what might be torined a solid mass of human beings as the cus- tomary accompaniments of mixed audiences could admit of ; yet, with it all, the crushing ordeal was apparently blocked by all concerned with a de- gree of good humor that was marked on the coun- ting the scene presented from the stage was one of soliditous interest. The very compar- ison it exhibited showed the difference between finite power and infinite wisdom. Mankind, with all its labor and its adventure, and its genius and dits counting, was enabled to keep only ene world in order-as far as the arrangement of its surface was concerned. But God, on the courtary, was enabled to keep a million million earths in motion, and in order, too, without any perceptible effort of his rower. We had but to examine the scale on which the heavens are built to feel the truth that there is a God. And all round his throne, forever and over, in silent majesty circles a constellation of unnum- bered systems, all showing God's godness and his gluy. These were the lessons we were to learn from gazing on the heavens-there were the teach- ings of astronomy. The next speaker was T. Edwards Converse, and his theme was "Nature and Mind." He treated it very well. He had confidence in himself, and ez- hibited the utmost self-possession. His style, however, was very uneven, and at time sertrava- gant.
